The Chicago Center for Psychoanalysis (CCP) offers
COMPLETE PSYCHOANALYTIC TRAINING

The Chicago Center for Psychoanalysis (CCP) offers full training in the theory and clinical practice of psychoanalysis for mental health workers. Multiple theoretical perspectives are employed, including approaches from the points of view of classical, ego, self psychologies, object relations, the interpersonal and the intersubjective. The curriculum is taught by outstanding psychoanalytic educators and is designed to reflect these multiple theoretical perspectives and to promote learning by comparative analyses of various theoretical models. The goal is to prepare candidates for the independent practice of psychoanalysis. Training is focused on theories of development, psychopathology, mental processes and technique utilizing the seminar and case conference approaches in addition to supervision of analytic cases. The curriculum has been designed to be innovative without neglecting the basic aspects of a classical psychoanalytic education.

Course work extends over four to six years with clinical work usually continuing beyond that time. The academic program curriculum is organized into three ten-week terms of two to three courses each, annually. (Enrollment on a part-time basis is possible.)

The clinical training involves the supervised psychoanalysis of three individuals, each extending for at least two years. A personal analysis is required and must have been completed or be underway by the time the candidate begins classes. Tuition fees are approximately $3,000 - 4,000 annually (for three academic terms) and are determined by the actual cost of the program divided by the number of students enrolled. (Costs of the personal analysis and clinical supervision of analytic training cases are not included in this fee.)

CCP is a training program incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois and adheres to Federal and State guidelines in its policy of nondiscrimination; including race, gender, religion and sexual orientation.
