The New England Folk Music Archives preserves, interprets, presents and documents the ongoing cultural legacy of folk music in all its forms and its connections to New England through educational programs, exhibitions, publications and performances. We emphasize the contributions of traditional, roots, blues and contemporary music and their role in enriching the experience of North American life.

Mandate

"Bringing The Legacy To Life" Through

Preservation & Restoration

Rare artifacts and recordings from passing eras are fragile and require professional care to insure their continued viability. To make these artifacts and recordings accessible to current generations it is imperative that restoration and digital replication be undertaken. To this end we established a custodial relationship with The Cambridge Historical Society to house some of the items in our care and are working with The Audio Preservation Studio of Harvard University's Loeb Music Library to evaluate and plan for digitizing rare and fragile reel to reel recordings.

Collection & Recollection

The archives provide an umbrella for gathering and sharing the many scattered collections now spread throughout the region. Our curatorial policy is to catalog, digitize and present the collections while the holder of the collection retains ownership rights. We recognize that many of the riches of the legacy are held in the memories of the participants and are actively recording the oral histories, stories and recollections of those who have some insight into the fabric of the time.

Presentation & Performance

Sharing and participation are hallmarks of the folk tradition and the communities it has nurtured and as such is a central aspect of our work. We present an active calendar of traveling multi-media exhibitions, public oral history salons, concerts and symposiums. We have prioritized the implementation of a dynamic, secure flash based web site which maximizes interactive experience while safeguarding the content.

Education & Consultation

Passing the torch is the real value of our work. We are dedicated to providing all generations access to the history contained in folk music, a history not regularly taught in schools. We are committed to passing on musical skills and equally committed to supporting the creative process that occurs when an individual "finds their own voice". We seek to share our skills, insights and expertise with other organizations to add vitality and cultural knowledge to the legacies which we all hold dear.
