Complete this part to provide the information required in Part I, line 2, and any additional information.

Proposals from deserving organizations that are registered as charities in India are reviewed for support to specific projects and support to social workers and activities they intend to pursue that help the poor and marginalized and are in line with AID's mission and its 501(c)(3) status. After discussion of detailed budgets in chapter meetings that are open to public and/or Executive Board meetings, and communication with the NGOs and social workers that help address any questions raised by volunteers, they are voted for approval. On approval they are forwarded to central Projects and Saathi team that work with the Project and Saathi coordinators of the Executive Board, to ensure compliance with 501(c)(3) standards, AID mission and ideology. Every group being considered for support or supported by the organization is visited by volunteers and these independent visit reports are documented. The groups receiving support send detailed reports on progress of work and make available their financial and audit statements. The Board of Directors makes the final decision in case any concerns or issues arise and also works with the EB to maintain oversight.

AID makes occasional grants to organizations in the US, in order to promote its mission of sustainable development and social justice. Selection of the partner organization and approval of the program is done based on detailed review of the proposal, scrutiny of the organization and its past and current activities, direct meeting and face-to-face discussion. After approval, the partner is expected to submit regular progress reports, and periodically make a presentation at an AID meeting. The project coordinators in AID scrutinize the progress reports and financial statements of the organization to ensure proper use of the grant. These reports and communication play a key role in decisions of whether to continue the funding for subsequent years.
