FORM 990, PART III-Statement of Program Service Accomplishments - 2009

The primary goal of the Food Allergy Initiative (FAI) is to find a cure for life-threatening food allergies. FAI also is committed to funding clinical activities to improve diagnosis and treatment; public policy initiatives to increase federal funding for research and to make the world safer for people with food allergies; and education programs for the food service/hospitality industries, schools, day care centers, and camps. Established in 1998 by concerned parents and grandparents, FAI is the largest private source of funding for food allergy research, nationally and internationally.

Research

FAI's Medical Advisory Board, which comprises leading experts in the field, identifies and recommends the most promising studies for funding and ensures that all research applications are rigorously peer-reviewed. Of particular note, as a result of FAI support, several potential therapies have been undergoing clinical trials, or soon will begin testing in humans. These include Food Allergy Herbal Formula 2 (FAHF-2), a therapy that may prevent anaphylactic reactions to peanuts, tree nuts, fish, shellfish, and sesame; a potential peanut allergy vaccine; peanut immunotherapy; and the administration of Trichuris suis ova (pig whipworm eggs) therapy as a treatment for peanut allergy.

Another critical research goal is to understand the incidence and prevalence of food allergies, and to learn the reason for the increase in this potentially fatal disease. To this end, important FAI-funded studies are shedding new light on the epidemiology of food allergy. These include a national telephone survey on the prevalence of peanut, tree nut, and sesame allergy (the third of a series conducted at five-year intervals) and the largest survey ever undertaken of the prevalence of childhood food allergy.

Clinical Activities

FAI continued to provide funding to maintain and expand food allergy centers of excellence around the country: the Jaffe Food Allergy Institute (Mount Sinai School of Medicine, New York, NY); Seattle Children's Hospital; Children's Memorial Hospital (Chicago, IL); and the University of Michigan Health System (Ann Arbor).

Public Policy/Advocacy

The primary goal of FAI's public policy program is to increase federal funding for food allergy research, particularly at the National Institutes of Health (NIH). Thanks, in large part, to FAI's efforts, the government's investment in research grew from $4 million in 2004 to nearly $21 million in 2009.

FAI also has advocated for important local initiatives. In 2009, as a result of FAI's efforts, New York city authorities mandated that all basic life-support ambulances were required to carry epinephrine (the only therapy that can halt a life-threatening reaction), and the New York City Council enacted a law requiring that all restaurants and food service establishments display a poster educating their employees about food allergies.

Education and Patient Services

FAI works constantly to develop food allergy education, awareness, and community outreach programs. Food-allergic families worldwide can rely on FAI's Web site, www.faiusa.org, for the latest and most accurate information about food allergy research, diagnosis, and treatment. To ensure that physicians provide the highest standard of care to patients with food allergies, FAI also funds professional education initiatives. In 2009, FAI provided underwriting for a supplement to the Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, setting forth comprehensive guidelines for administering oral food challenges (the gold standard for diagnosis).
