2009 was a year of explosive growth for the Open Books literacy department. By bringing Open Books Buddies to 7 schools, expanding Adventures In Creative Writing field trips to four sessions weekly, launching an evening program (WeWrite) and a virtual mentoring program (VWrite), introducing Saturday family programs in the store, playing key roles in strategic community events, and growing our universe of partner programs, we served more students than ever, in more ways, with more tools - but all with the same inspiring, often life-changing, Open Books spirit. Open Books Buddies, our first program, connected more than 70 volunteers with 2 Little Buddies each week in 2009. 100% of the students said they enjoyed coming to Buddies, and 97% of volunteers confirmed that their students were delighted to see them. To compound that joy and further the love of reading, many students received free books to take home and keep. In our own new classrooms, Adventures In Creative Writing field trips met weekly for prose, poetry, slam, and fairy tale workshops. 40 schools from all across the city came to take part, turning 1,200 students into authors. New for 2009 was WeWrite, a series of writing workshops for adults. The first round served 20 students, the second held twice that many at the creative writing sessions alone. And VWrite, a new virtual mentoring program for high school juniors, made a profound difference in the lives of 65 students and their mentors. 2009 will go down in Open Books history as a year of massive growth and expansion: the year that we emptied our warehouse not once but twice, collected tens of thousands of books, expanded our online sales to two channels, and stocked a retail store with inventoried books. Sending 176,000 books to sell online at the end of 2008 left us with a clean slate and empty warehouse. Through book pickups, drives, dropoffs and events, we soon filled it up again. By the end of 2009, the total number of books collected for the year topped 120,000, and the grand total to date was 300,000+. In 2009, the bookstore dream came to life. With the opening of our flagship store in November, Open Books proudly brought an expanded experience to everyone involved with our organization and began spreading the mission of literacy to a whole new audience. By the end of the year, retail sales generated $21,470 in revenue to support our literacy programs and outreach, and the place that one article described as "the most beautiful bookstore in Chicago," was in full swing.
