The Indian Land Tenure Foundation (ILTF) received renewed funding in 2009 from the National Rural Funders Collaborative to partner with the Native American Community Development Corporation (NACDC) to work with Indian communities in Montana on sustainable economic development through strategies that focus on recapturing, protecting, and utilizing tribal assets. The objective of this project is to work with individual tribal communities in a facilitated participatory process utilizing a four-tier strategic planning and action strategy. Grants awarded in late 2008 and continued in 2009 by ILTF with the Fort Belknap and Fort Peck Indian communities on their reservations in Montana addressed: 1) a carbon sequestration project, 2) a workforce training and land development project, and 3) a sacred site protection and education project for economic development. Through our partner, NACDC, local, city, county, state and federal government officials and members of the business community participated in economic development planning sessions which opened important dialogue with the non-Indian community to help break down barriers of race, class culture, power, policy and the Tribes participation in the development effort. During 2009 significant progress was made on all three grants. Specifically, the carbon sequestration project fought through various struggles including accessing information from the BIA. The Tribe is in negotiations to contract approximately 189,218 acres of rangeland with the National Carbon Offset Coalition, as well as developing a management plan and drafting a handbook designed to identify the steps to complete a carbon sequestration sale. The grantee involved in the workforce training and land development project has created a draft training handbook and is working with the community college in conducting a training session based on the defined process. The sacred site protection and education project grant was awarded in August of 2008. Unfortunately, although the majority of the research for this grant was completed, the tribal department responsible for completing this grant was closed in the midst of the economic recession and the final component of reporting and dissemination of information was not completed. Meetings were held regularly with tribal governments and varying levels of city, county, state or federal government officials to discuss the goals of the project. The focus of these meetings was on community development, workforce development, economic revitalization, quality community, quality environment and quality workforce. As a result of the meetings, recommendations were made for a comprehensive vision to be developed to address how the various aspects of the community fit together across jurisdictions and over time. A working group was formed with a goal of developing a general set of guidelines, a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU), to work together to increase communication, cooperation and coordination across all jurisdictions and to promote the interests of all parties involved. Once completed, the plan will concentrate on existing land uses and possible networks and connections between existing land uses and future growth and development.

As a result of the economic downturn and reduced funding from foundations and government, estate planning services was drastically reduced in 2009. Thanks to the final year of a three-year grant, the Northwest Estate Planning project was continued through 2009 with limited staff. Another effect of the economic downturn saw ILTF’s staff capacity cut in half in May 2009. This included ending its funding relationship with the Institute for Indian Estate Planning and Probate at Seattle University School of Law which was responsible for overseeing and assisting with the activities associated with this project. During the course of this work we identified effective strategies to reduce further fractionation of individual Indian allotments and consolidate fractionated allotments. These strategies included community education on the Indian estate planning process and use of multiple instruments such as gift deeds, exchanges, trusts and land sales. Law school students were selected and trained for externships on reservations where they provided estate planning and education services under attorney supervision. Direct legal representation for Indian clients on probate issues and continuing legal education training for attorneys on Indian probate issues was also provided. During 2009 will writing and estate planning services were focused primarily on two reservations in eastern Washington where there was a continuous demand for services. In other areas of the Northwest, ILTF made a concerted effort to disseminate information about AIPRA including a Foundation tabloid, The Message Runner, dealing specifically with AIPRA and will writing. The 10-year benchmark targets 10,000 wills written and 5,000 other estate planning documents. A culmination of the past three years on all estate planning projects shows services and/or information was provided to nearly 12,000 Indian people related to their intergenerational transfer of their land asset. 535 estate planning documents were prepared and executed for clients, 17 law students gained practical experience in Indian law, 10,776 people attended community education events on estate planning and land consolidation training, and approximately 2,150 received written material about the probate law and need for having a will.

Estate planning services with Midwest Planning were discontinued as of April 30, 2009 as a result of the economic downturn and reduced funding from foundations and government. Much of the work during those four months addressed administrative closure to the project. Another effect of the economic downturn saw ILTF’s staff capacity cut in half in May 2009. This included ending its funding relationship with the Institute for Indian Estate Planning and Probate at Seattle University School of Law which was responsible for overseeing and assisting with the activities associated with this project.
