PART III

28. Government advocacy for the architecture profession: With the rapid and significant decline in the design and construction industry in New Mexico, AIA NM held meetings with interested architects in the state to review the effects of ARRA on the industry in the state. Members developed a White Paper on the advantages of “vertical construction” vs. “horizontal construction” and its effects on employment. Informational meetings were held with federal legislators and state officials to explain the advantages of funding vertical construction. Information on ARRA funding was posted on the AIA NM website. While attending an AIA leadership conference in Washington, DC, officers of AIA-NM met with the New Mexico legislative delegation to lobby for specific legislation which would improve the economic plight of architects. At the state level, with the defeat of a proposed “Good Samaritan” bill during the legislative session, AIA NM sought other ways to assure immunity for architects aiding in disaster recovery via existing state statutes.
29. Promote the Profession of Architecture: In conjunction with the biennial AIA New Mexico Conference which was organized by the local AIA Albuquerque chapter, AIA New Mexico held a design and honor awards competition. Forty-seven projects were submitted. Nine projects were awarded Certificates for Honor, Merit and Special Recognition. There were four entries for Honor Awards from which one received the AIA New Mexico Life Time Achievement Medal and one received the New Mexico Architects Medal. Awards were presented at the Conference banquet and illustrations of the winning designs were exhibited at the Art Gallery of the University of New Mexico School of Architecture and Planning. These awards promote and honor excellence in architectural design within the profession and the resulting publicity in local and state media promote the high standards of the profession of architecture in New Mexico.
30. Support the Development of New Architects: AIA New Mexico supports the work of a volunteer Intern Development Program (IDP) Coordinator who meets with architect interns and assists them through the process of completing their internship and passing the Architect Record Examination. In 2009, the coordinator assisted 35 new interns who sought help with the process. Four ARE candidates became licensed in 2009. Study sessions were set up in Albuquerque and Santa Fe and study materials were lent out. This support of future members of the architecture profession is a significant purpose of AIA New Mexico and assures the long-term future of the profession.
