Scientists at the Institute are attacking the challenging problem of Alzheimer's disease (AD) from many angles. The AD is one of a class of several deadly brain diseases being studied at the Institute, and pieces of the Alzheimer's puzzle could come from any of studies on any of these disorders, which include prion diseases, Parkinsonism, frontotemporal dementia, and dementia with Lewy bodies. Institute scientists are applying their recently developed methods for a systems approach of prion infection to frontotemporal dementia and AD. These and similar studies open the door to eventual identification of apparently healthy people destined to develop degenerative brain diseases in later life. Fourteen publications authored by Institute scientists were published in scientific journals during the last fiscal year.

The Institute serves as a resource for science education in a rural region lacking a research university. A grant from the Howard Hughes Medical Institute allowed expansion of this program to foster supplements and improvements to the curriculum and to offer public lectures on scientific topics for the community. The goals of the Institute's education programs are to foster critical thinking, enhance science literacy and help train the next generation of scientists. In the past summer, 6 high school students, 6 high school teachers, one middle school teacher, and 3 undergraduates participated in the Institute's laboratory or science education internship programs.
