In the event that the above schedule reflects a situation where a Treasury Bill or Government Agency Discount Note was sold prior to maturity, it will be included in Short Term Gain or Loss column of this report. The gain or loss should be reported as ordinary interest income or as a reduction of ordinary interest income, as the case may be. In the event that the above schedule reflects a maturity of a Treasury Bill, no gain or loss will be reported in the above schedule. Instead, the discount on Treasury Bills is reported on Form 1099-Int provided by your custodian. While the securities transactions listed here are derived from records which we believe to be reliable and the calculations contained herein are based upon our best understanding of the proper methods for such calculations, no assurances are hereby given nor any representations made as to the accuracy or completeness of these reports. Therefore each individual investor should consult his/her tax consultant as to the matters addressed here. This report does not include transactions in certain non-agency residential mortgage-backed securities (CMOs/MBs) as information necessary to accurately portray realized gains and/or losses in these securities is not available as of the date of this report. If these securities are held in your account, a separate schedule will be sent to you at a later date containing relevant tax information for transactions in these securities.
