Form 990-PF - Part IX-A

1) Tiger Foundation hires outside consulting firms to provide technical assistance to the Foundation's grantee organizations. The technical assistance grants enable the consulting firms that have expertise in particular areas (e.g. Nonprofit financial management, board development etc.) to provide assistance to these grantee organizations through one-on-one coaching, sponsored seminars, and training programs. As a result of this technical assistance, the grantee organizations will be better able to serve their communities.
Total Grantee-related technical assistance grants were $450,050.

2) Tiger Foundation staff spends approximately 10% of their time, or $138,492 supporting the grantees' staff and purpose by:

- Serving on various affinity groups and committees to advance the work of grantees
- Providing technical assistance and advice to accomplish the grantees charitable purpose
- Conducting a highly engaged strategic grant making process

Form 990-PF – Part XV line 2

2a) Name/Address of person application should be addressed to:

Amy Barger
Managing Director
Tiger Foundation
101 Park Avenue
New York, NY 10178
212-984-2565

2b) Form in which applications should be submitted:

1. Applications may be submitted via Tiger Foundation's website, http.//www tigerfoundation org/ by following the link "How to Apply"

or

2. Potential applicants must submit a three-page letter that includes a brief history of the organization, the population served, and services offered. It must also include a description of the proposed program (its mission, objectives, outcomes achieved, staffing, budget, and funding sources), the amount of the funding request, and a list of supporters for the past three years.

2c) Submission deadlines-None

2d) Any restrictions/limitations on awards (geographic area/charitable field)

Please refer to the website for the most accurate and up to date review of funding guidelines. Only in NYC and only organizations who meet our grant guidelines which are as follows:

Across all program areas, we seek comprehensive, long-term, preventive programs. Programs providing one-time services and short-term interventions are not likely to receive funding. We seek organizations with skilled management as well as committed board members who contribute financially in addition to giving their time. Programs must have clearly defined, measurable goals and objectives, realistic implementation strategies, and comprehensive outcomes tracking and reporting mechanisms. Applicants are also evaluated on their cost-effectiveness, replicability, and ability to attract funding from other public and private sources.

Within all three program areas, the Foundation seeks funding opportunities that leverage the substantial investment of the public sector and other funders, that are replicable/scalable to achieve maximum impact, and that produce specific, objective, and measurable outcomes documenting their efficacy.

Applicants must be exempt from income taxes under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Requests for support are not considered for individuals, annual or capital campaigns, endowments, benefits, public policy or lobbying groups, legal aid, existing obligations or debt liability.

The Tiger Foundation provides grants typically ranging in size from $50,000 to $500,000. Unlike many foundations, which give away some portion of their annual investment income, the Tiger Foundation raises its funds every year and the level of our contributions varies from one year to the next Therefore, while we do consider grant renewal requests, all grants represent a one-time commitment. After receiving three consecutive grants, organizations are ineligible for funding for a period of at least one year. After that hiatus, grantees are welcome to reapply.

EDUCATION

The Education Committee's grant-making is founded on the assumption that one of the best means of breaking the cycle of poverty is to provide children with a high-quality education. The New York City public school system frequently fails the students who need that education the most – those born into poor families, in communities lacking resources and other educational options. Thus, the Committee's overarching goal is to improve the city's public school system and to offer every child in New York City a high-quality education.

Substantive change in a system this large and complex takes time, while more than one million kids struggle daily in inadequate public schools. Therefore, as a secondary goal, the Education Committee provides funding to some alternatives to the public school system as well as academic enrichment programs designed to compensate for the deficiencies in schools. Ideally, those public school alternatives will exert positive pressure on the public school system and act as reform agents in addition to serving individual students.

The Committee continues to seek funding opportunities that leverage the substantial investment of the public sector; which are replicable and achieve maximum impact; and which produce specific, objective, and measurable outcomes documenting their efficacy Finally, the Committee seeks funding opportunities where it can become a significant partner, avoiding grants that remain a negligible portion of an organizational (or program) budget over time.

Model Schools / Systemic Reform

The Education Committee has reviewed and funded a variety of systemic reform initiatives, including intermediaries, model schools, professional development programs, and other programs designed to introduce an element of competition to the school system. The Committee remains confident that such competition can serve as a means to achieve school reform.

New York State passed a strong charter school law in 1998, allowing approved schools great latitude in staffing, budgeting, curriculum, etc. We currently fund ten charter school operators, most of whom manage multiple schools in New York City. The Committee continues to examine the issue of how best to support these schools and the broader charter school movement We believe that charter schools are an excellent vehicle for public school reform and we will continue to seek opportunities to partner with both high-quality charter management organizations and talented charter leaders running stand-alone, non-networked schools.

Charter schools, school intermediary models, and DOE/CBO partnerships, constituted 65% of Education Committee support in 2010. Charter school models alone constituted 38% of total Committee support. Our objective here is (i) to demonstrate how schools may offer a high quality education to highly at-risk students within the financial restraints of the existing system, (ii) to publicize the successes of these schools as shining examples of how the public school system can do a better job, and (iii) to create model programs which can be replicated system-wide and which can access public funds as autonomous charter schools. Alternatives to public schools made up 5.5% of the portfolio. Investments in professional development and other school support models made up 15% of the portfolio.

Academic Enrichment
The Education Committee funds a variety of academic enrichment programs. All of these programs are offered by community-based organizations, not the public schools themselves Some are linked more closely to the school day than others; some are located on site at public schools. We do not support pure summer interventions or school-day curricular enhancements. All of the programs must document concrete academic outcomes showing improved student performance. Academic enrichment programs comprised 14.5% of the 2010 portfolio

JOB TRAINING

The Job Training Committee's mission is to help low-income and welfare-dependent individuals attain and maintain economic self-sufficiency. The Committee works to achieve its mission primarily by funding job training and placement programs. The Committee also invests in a limited number of social business ventures seeking to increase the availability of permanent and transitional jobs for the hard-to-employ.

The Committee provides program-specific as well as general operating support, and in all cases seeks to leverage existing public and private funds. This includes funding the creation of new models that are later adopted by government agencies.

Training Programs
The Job Training Committee funds a wide variety of organizations serving the full spectrum of clients, from those with the highest barriers to employment to dislocated workers. The portfolio includes both out-of-school youth and adult programs. While clients served must be low-income or welfare-dependent, the committee in recent years also has been supporting a number of career-ladder and wage progression programs to help already engaged low-wage workers improve their earning opportunities on the path to economic self-sufficiency.

The Committee has identified several program models that are successful in promoting long-term economic self-sufficiency. Some take the immediate-employment approach, some focus on training; some are industry-specific, with strong ties to employers, while others provide general job-readiness skills. However, all funded program models have three key things in common: a focus on job placement (not merely training or job readiness); a mandatory tracking and follow-up component for at least one year (preferably two); and formal outcomes measurement meeting minimum performance thresholds. In organizations serving disconnected youth, we are particularly interested in those programs producing multiple positive outcomes (e.g., completion of the GED, placement in a full-time job, placement in a part-time job, and college enrollment). In the multi-agency community partnership models similar multiple outcomes are tracked to measure program impact on both disconnected youth and young adult clients. In all program models, the Committee uses the performance measures to calculate the cost per successful outcome for each program in order to conduct a cost-benefit analysis.

SOCIAL SERVICES/YOUTH DEVELOPMENT

The Social Services/Youth Development Committee is dedicated to a comprehensive, long-term approach to breaking the cycle of poverty, and employs a four-pronged strategy:

- Intervening at a critical time for very young children, ages birth to three years, who are born in high-risk families and environments
- Supporting fragile families on the brink of poverty in their efforts to maintain self-sufficiency, and providing assistance to impoverished families struggling to regain productive, healthy lives
- Breaking the cycle of poverty for at-risk youth by preventing/discouraging too-early parenting and other high-risk behaviors and providing positive experiences to aid in their educational and social-emotional development
- Supporting youth aging out of the foster care system through a variety of service models

Early Childhood

The earlier the intervention in the life of a child, the more likely a successful outcome will be achieved and the greater the potential for savings on future social service costs. Research on early brain development confirms that it is possible to achieve substantial improvement in the functioning of children born into high-risk situations (e.g., drug-exposed, abused or neglected, living in extreme poverty, having poorly educated parents).

The best opportunity for intervention is during the early years, from birth to age three. The Social Services/Youth Development Committee has found a variety of programs focusing on such young children, both in their homes and in community-based centers. We also have found several excellent programs designed to improve the child-rearing skills of the parents of very young children.

The Committee recognizes that an Early Childhood intervention may take years to produce lasting results, but it is committed to the tracking of measurable, incremental outcomes as predictors of longer-term impact.

Family Support

New York City is home to 3 million people either living below the federal poverty line or teetering on its brink. Residents of poor communities often lack access to or knowledge about the traditional support systems that keep families together. The disintegration of these communities and of the family unit itself creates an ongoing cycle. For example, single heads of household are far more likely to be on public assistance, and their children are much more likely to wind up involved in the criminal justice system or failing in school. And worse, many fragile families exhibit multiple social pathologies, with a complicated set of intertwined issues further contributing to the fragility of the family unit.

Successful Family Support programs must be long-term and comprehensive. They must provide all the services necessary for families to overcome barriers to self-sufficiency and they must be, at their core, designed to preserve an intact and productive family unit. In short, they must provide "one stop shopping" for families in trouble.

The Committee seeks and funds organizations able to document their success with these families as they struggle to improve their "assets" and work toward self-sufficiency.

Youth Development Programs

The Social Services/Youth Development Committee considers a host of youth development programs designed to prevent high-risk behaviors and teen pregnancy, and to keep youth on track to obtain positive educational, social, and/or employment outcomes. Models include school-based curricula, peer education programs, mentoring programs, and multi-component models. Whether programs are geared to specific goals, such as pregnancy prevention, or focused more broadly on general youth development efforts, programs should be able to demonstrate long-term outcomes pertaining to specific goals in each offered service area.

Youth Aging out of Foster Care

Targeting youth leaving foster care represents a critical intervention point. Without the necessary support services, these youth will not be able to escape the cycle of poverty If these teens are not provided with the tools to become self-sufficient we will likely see them as adults in our job training and family support programs, in many cases after years of public investment in welfare or the criminal justice system. In addition, children and teens in foster care spend years in the system without stable relationships and support for education. As a result, these young people often find themselves homeless, incarcerated, or forced onto public assistance.

A quality aftercare program must be accessible and available to all youth and must provide for sufficient planning prior to discharge from the system. It must also involve family members, social workers, and/or mentors, and provide a range of case management, educational, housing, health, and employment services necessary for the transition to independent living. As with all programs in the SS/YD portfolio, programs for foster care populations must provide long-term follow-up and data collection for at least one year (preferably two).
