National University of Mongolia
Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology
Room 268, Univ Bldg 2
Baga toiruu-47
Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia

On June 24, 2008 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $125,000 to the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology at the National University of Mongolia. The purpose of the grant is to upgrade the institutional capacity of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology in order to make the department an institution that offers internationally sound anthropological research and training in Mongolia, and thus establish the field of socio-cultural anthropology firmly in Mongolia.

The specific objectives of the project are to 1) develop a sound doctoral program that meets international standards, 2) train four new doctorates jointly with the Mongolian and Inner Asian Studies Unit (MIASU) and the Department of Social Anthropology, University of Cambridge, and recruit them as faculty members in the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, and 3) build an up-to-date resource collection on socio-cultural anthropology and upgrade technical capacity of the department.

The grant covers the period January 1, 2009 through December 31, 2013. The grant is being disbursed in five annual installments of $25,000. The $25,000 installment for the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2011 was paid on January 11, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting for the 2011 installment were received in September 2011 and are attached to this tax return.

ATTACHMENT F

Annual Narrative Report (2010-2011 Third year installment)

Background

According to the project plan, in the third year, we had following tasks to perform, to send two of our doctoral students to Cambridge to study and work under the supervision of their supervisors for one full term, to develop two syllabi for our PhD curriculum development and to send one faculty member to Cambridge for one month to develop the courses syllabi under Cambridge anthropologists supervision, to purchase books necessary for the two chosen courses and to purchase two PCs. The project implementation has completely accomplished with success. In the following I provide details of actions took place in the range of the project.

PhD students in Cambridge

The first and the most important task was to send another two PhD students to Cambridge, P.Chuluunbat and B.Tsetsentsolmon. They were obliged to take courses, get supervision from their supervisors, develop their PhD project, write essays and conduct library research. The students arrived in Cambridge by the mid of January 2010 just before the commencement of the Lent Term. P.Chuluunbat worked under the supervision of Dr David Sneath and developed his research project on Mining in Mongolia. He is going to study mining in Mongolia by comparing the one established during the communist period and the recent ones initiated recently. He is going to look at how mining is different in communism and post communism addressing discussions in the range of liberalism and neo-liberalism. He also worked with Prof C Humphrey on Mongolian shamanism. Prof Humphrey visited Mongolia in early September 2011 where she also worked with Chuluunbat on shamanism. They have done some fieldwork on contemporary Mongolian shamanism and preparing to write up two co-authored articles one on ethics and the other on international shamanism. B.Tsetsentsolmon is working under the supervision of Dr Bulag, and exploring ethnic national identity embodied in national music. With her supervisor she is also exploring cultural politics involving over tone singing (hoomii) appeared between Mongolia and Inner Mongolia, China, in the process of registration of overtone singing in the UNESCO cultural heritage preservation list. Currently Dr Bulag is visiting Mongolia which is providing additional opportunity for her to work with her supervisor. All of their costs to stay in Cambridge were covered from the project as it is planned.

Development of doctoral courses

Prof L.Munkh-Erdene worked in Cambridge for one month to develop two PhD course syllabi. The visit took place during the stay of the two PhD students, therefore it was beneficial to organize and guide them in Cambridge. The two courses were developed during the trip was Anthropology and History and Political Economy of Nomadic Pastoralism. In addition to developing the syllabi the project also purchased books to be used in the courses. Since both of the courses are to be with anthropological regional studies most of the books were on Anthropology of Mongolia, Inner Asia, China, Central Asia and Russia. Since the chosen books were not general anthropology but regional studies their costs were relatively high and not available on sale. Therefore, chapters of rare books were photocopied as well as articles from journals for the restricted use of the department only.

Doctoral student stipend

As we planned in the project starting from this academic year the project offers small grant for the four chosen PhD students. The amount of the grant is 100USD per month per person. For those who spent three months in Cambridge received 900 USD each in total because they received other benefits to stay in Cambridge. While the other two PhD student who did not visit Cambridge this time were funded 1200USD each.

Purchase and installment of personal computers

The project purchased two PCs for PhD students use. Two of the PCs are specifically for the two selected PhD students enrolled in the program. All the PCs now have internet connections and necessary office programs installed.

Universidad Nacional de Cordoba
Museo de Antropologia
Av. Hipolito Yrigoyen 174
5000 Cordoba, Argentina

On June 24, 2008 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $125,000 to the Museum of Anthropology at the Universidad Nacional de Cordoba. The purpose of the grant is to train professionals who will undertake research, teaching and application of archaeology, social anthropology and bioanthropology, prioritizing two main research lines: 1) culture and politics, emphasizing human rights, violence, multiculturalism, identity and politics; and 2) material culture and ways of life, placing special attention on social archaeology, hunter gatherers, environment, technology, heritage and museum studies.

The specific objective is to equip graduates with the necessary knowledge, skills and experience to carry out their activities from an integrative and interdisciplinary perspective, training them to contribute to the enrichment of these sciences and their applications. The goal within five years is to: 1) enlarge the number of doctorates in anthropology in the University's PhD program, 2) augment the number of ongoing research projects, 3) increase international relations, 4) integrate graduate teaching in the degree program, and 5) stimulate greater involvement of anthropology in non-academic realms.

The grant covers the period January 1, 2009 through December 31, 2013. The grant is being disbursed in five annual installments of $25,000. The $25,000 installment for the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2011 was paid on January 11, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting for the 2011 installment was received in October 2011 and are attached to this tax return.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL DOCTORAL PROGRAM AT THE MUSEUM OF ANTHROPOLOGY, UNIVERSIDAD NACIONAL DE CÓRDOBA, ARGENTINA

Annual progress report 2011

The Anthropological Doctoral Program at the Museum of Anthropology of Córdoba aims to prepare professionals for research and academic education in Anthropological Sciences, with specialized training in the three classic sub-areas of research: social anthropology, archaeology and bioanthropology. The program is oriented towards intensive theoretical and practical training in order to produce professionals who will be able to undertake independent research projects, exercise leadership of scientific research teams, communicate their research results, and teach at the university. It is hoped that through this program the students will also acquire various experiences in diverse academic contexts and form external relationship which will open possibilities for exchange and dialogue with other anthropologists, while generating their own future networks. It is hoped that this would impact positively on their education and in their personal and institutional performance.

The program began in 2009 and during 2010, the second year of development of the five year program, we began with the execution of the second phase of the project, centred mainly in the training of students, which would be accomplished by courses given both by local and guest instructors, research seminars, and on field work carried out by the students. This stage was planned for 30 months long. Complementary with these activities, it was planned the acquisition of books as a way of continuous updating for students and teachers.

In line with this, during 2011 we continued with the development of this second stage of the project, in which we accomplished most of the goals that were planned for this period, according to the proposed schedule. The following points summarize the activities undertaken and objectives achieved:

- a. By the end of the year, we will have dictated 11 courses covering the three fields of anthropology, some specific of each area (4 in Archaeology, 4 in Social Anthropology, 1 in Bioanthropology) and others which crosscut them (See Appendix 1 for details concerning the subject of the course and their professors. As the academic year ends at Argentina in December, they are still two courses to be held on November, as well as a colloquium with teachers and students in December).

b. We counted with the visit of five professors from abroad:

- I Dr. Ian Hodder, from Stanford University, USA, who gave a course about the entanglement between human – things.
- II. Dr Héctor D'Antoni, former researcher from the NASA, who gave a course about paleoecology and humans.
- III Dr. Benjamin Alberti, from Framingham University, USA, who gave a course about Archaeology, body and new materialism.
- IV Dr. Joanna SOFAER, from the University of Southampton, United Kingdom, who gave a course on body and materiality.
- V. Dr. Fernando Rabossi, from the Universidad Federal de Río de Janeiro, Brasil (one of the universities partner of our program), who will give a course about informal economy on November.

For the courses dictated in English, we had the aid of a simultaneous translation system, in order to facilitate not only a better understanding of the course, but also a more fluid dialogue between the students and the teachers.

- c. The other courses were dictated by professors of the Museo de Antropología, who are members of the staff of the project, and by professors from other universities or research centers of Argentina (Universidad del Centro de la Provincia de Buenos Aires, Universidad Nacional de San Martín, Universidad Nacional de Mar del Plata, Universidad Nacional de Catamarca, CONICET, FLACSO)
- d. One of the visiting professors came with a Fulbright fellowship and stayed at the Museo de Antropología during three months, which facilitated a fluid contact with students beyond the classes
- e. 242 students took the different courses of the doctorate during this year until the date, coming not only from our doctorate program but from other universities of Argentina, Chile and Colombia.
- f. We have acquired 57 books, in Spanish, English and Portuguese, for updating the library of the Museo de Antropología¹.

¹ We had planned in the original budget to buy minor equipment, but as we got it by other financial source, it was decided by the academic council of the doctorate to buy more books

- g. Thirty-one new students have been admitted in the program. Twenty-two of them with projects in Social Anthropology, eight in Archaeology and one in Bioanthropology. In total, we have 49 students enrolled in the program, with retention of 90 % in two years
- h. Eighteen students are on scholarships from national universities or organizations promoting scientific research (CONICET, National Council of Scientific and technical research, ANPCyT, National Agency for Promotion of Science and Technology) to make their doctoral studies
- i. These 18 students participate at different research projects of their supervisors, many of them at the Museo de Antropología of the Universidad Nacional de Córdoba
- j. We made a selection of six outstanding students to whom we will support part of their field work with a small grant from the budget of the IDG.
- k. In March 2011 we applied to a bi-national grant from the Mercosur (the south american common market) for the improvement of doctorate programs between two universities, which we won in July. The project aims to strengthen our doctorate with the assistance of the Doctorate and Master Program in Anthropology and Sociology of the Universidad Federal de Rio de Janeiro, Brazil (one of our partners in the IDG), and consists in the movement of students and teachers from Córdoba to Brazil and teachers from Brazil to Córdoba, in a two year program (renewable for two more). Six students will take courses at Rio de Janeiro for three months, while argentine teachers will make shorter stays of one month, and six professors from the Brazilian doctorate will come to dictate courses at Cordoba each year, beginning in 2012. The grant covers all the expenses until an amount of U$S 18,000 per year for the Argentine doctorate and U$S 48,000 for the Brazilian partner.
- l. Our doctorate program has been selected by an international congress of anthropology, the Reunión de Antropología del Mercosur (Mercosur Anthropological Meeting), as organizers of the 2013 meeting, where they will participate around 1500 anthropologists from South America

In order to measure the success of the program during its progress, in the project we had devised a series of fulfilment indicators as an indirect assessment of the progressive achievement of the development goals. In the following table we summarize the activities we had planned for the third year, their respective foreseen fulfilment indicators and the status of their current implementation. We also include in another table a summary of the general expenses of the year.

PLANNED	FULLFILMENT INDICATORS	ACCOMPLISHMENTS

ACTIVITIES
A Invitation of teachers	1. At least 6 graduate courses given in subjects common to all three branches of anthropology	1. Eleven courses given in all three fields of anthropology 2. Five professors from foreign universities invited 3 Six courses given by local professors
B. Research seminars	1. Research seminars carried out in each of the branches of anthropology. 2. Students integrated in research projects	1. Not fulfilled: this year there was not held any research seminar. They are planned for next year. 2. 18 students integrated in research projects
C. Acquisition of books	1. Increased number of books at the library (about 40 works)	1. 57 books acquired
D Training of students	1. Courses passed by not less than 80% of students 2. 90% or more retention of students	1. Eleven courses given in all three fields of anthropology 2. 31 new enrolled students (49 students in total from 2009 to present day) 3. Approximately 85 % of the students have passed the courses until now. 4. 90% retention of students
E. Fieldwork	1. Call for grants for conducting fieldwork 2. At least 10 students granted for field work 3. Lengthy fieldworks done (not less than 30 days)	1 One call for grants for fieldwork 2. 6 students were selected as recipients of the grants 3. Not fulfilled yet: Fieldwork will be held after the academic term
F. Joint discussion meeting	1. Enhanced information flow 2. Process evaluation done by teachers and students 3. Report of development and balance of the program	1. Not fulfilled yet: A colloquium with students and professors is planned for December.

() We had a remnant of $ 1865 from 2010 budget that was add to 2011

Plans for 2012

For the next year we will continue with the planned actions in our proposal in the IDG. Based on the acquired experience, we think it is not necessary to introduce any significant change.

For the fourth year of the project we had proposed the following actions:

- Invitation of teachers from abroad to give courses
- Acquisition of books and field and laboratory equipment.
- Allowing outstanding students to undertake fieldwork
- Transfer activities of the students

We hope that at the end of this fourth year, students will have finished their systematic training and completed their field work. It is expected that by the end of this stage they will have enhanced their knowledge and through the transfer activities will have achieved a more reflexive attitude about their experiences and field research. It is believed that this will have a positive impact in the next year of its formation, in which students will focus primarily on writing their theses. Library improvements will be continuously updated.

Next year budget

According to the expenses of 2011, we find better to increase the amount dedicated to the fieldwork grants and to buy more books than minor equipment for fieldwork original scheduled, as students can have access to them by means of their universities projects or institutions.

YEAR 4
(a) Training activities
3 Visiting professors	Each professor:	$ 5,000	$ 15,000
8 Grants for field work	Average grant per student	$ 1,000	$ 8,000
Sub-total (a)			$ 23,000
(b) Equipment
Library material	Purchase of books (+ shipping) Average each book:	$ 110	$ 2,000
		Sub-total (b)	$ 2,000
		Total Year 3 (a + b)	$ 25,000

Final remarks

As a balance, we can say that most of the goals of the third year of development of the project have been satisfactory fulfilled as well as we had some additional achievements that should be highlighted:

- our students have had the opportunity of a diverse range of courses given by outstanding professional of the international academic world;
- they will have the opportunity of conducting fieldwork and administrate their own grant,
- the registration of doctorate students have increased,
- many students from other universities and abroad have come to our program to take courses;
- the doctorate won an international grant for the next two years which will enhance the chances of international mobility of students and teachers and enrich the program;
- in terms of local development, we see a better positioning of our doctorate in the field of postgraduate anthropological studies at Argentina

Wenner-Gren Foundation
Expenditure responsibility grant
12-31-11 990-PF

Tribhuvan University
Central Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Kirtipur
Kathmandu, Nepal

On June 2, 2009 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $125,000 to the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Tribhuvan University. Through collaboration with Cornell University, the department aims to improve the theoretical and methodological training of Ph.D students and upgrade the credentials of current faculty who do not hold a Ph.D. The IDG grant will be used to upgrade the current curriculum, provide modest support for research, intensify international exposure and exchange and build up the library and electronic resources. Currently in Nepal, the research agenda in anthropology is frequently determined by NGOs and development agencies where many of the students and faculty gain their experience. The IDG will allow more freedom for the department itself to determine its academic concerns. A primary aim is to significantly improve the theoretical and methodological capacity of the anthropology department as opposed to applied/development anthropology, thereby allowing the department to be competitive and contribute internationally.

The grant covers the period January 1, 2010 through December 31, 2014. The grant is being disbursed in five annual installments of $25,000. The annual $25,000 installment for the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2011 was paid on January 13, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting were received in October 2011 and are attached to this tax return.

Annual Progress Report (Academic Year: 2011-2012)

The Dor Bahadur Bista Project for Advanced Training in Anthropology at Tribhuvan University (IDG Program hereafter): carried out in collaboration with Department of Anthropology, Cornell University (Financially supported by Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research).

The academic activities that began with the coming of the IDG Wenner-Gren Project (as it is among colleagues at TU) in 2010 have continued smoothly and by now more and more students and colleagues are becoming supportive of the programs and activities initiated by the Project. The sustained intellectual support from Prof. Kathryn March, Prof. David Holmberg and the Department of Anthropology at Cornell University has been significant.

Because of this and other joint programs and activities for the faculty and students between the two institutions, we feel that more and more young anthropology and sociology scholars at TU have gained confidence and are coming forward to take part in academically oriented discussions and talk programs in the department as well as other academic forums now. The quality of academic debates and the discussions at the talk programs is certainly showing improvements within a short time. The number of young scholars participating in such forums has also been significant.

The IDG W-G committee at TU was out in Dhulikhel for the Seminar Development Retreat on March 4-5, 2011. The participants included:

1. Prof. Kathryn March
2. Prof. Dilli R. Dahal
3. Prof. Om Gurung
4. Prof. Ram B. Chhetri
5. Associate Prof. Laya P. Uperty
6. Dr. Mukta S. Tamang

During the two day meetings, the committee did the following:

- 1) Review the achievements of the academic year 2010-011;
- 2) As suggested by Professors from CU, the Ph.D. student this year would be selected within May so that she/he can reach Cornell at the beginning of Fall Semester 2011; and
- 3) Review of eligibility and selection criteria for different types of fellowships in relation to IDG program at TU. Prof. March informed us about the progress made by Mr. Suresh Dhakal who was at CU to complete his dissertation write-up while attending some relevant graduate level courses there.

The Call for Application (see Annex) for the following fellowships was circulated towards the second half of March 2011:

- Cornell University Visiting Fellowship (Semester: Fall 2011)—one person
- Travel Awards for Faculty to present papers at Anthropological seminars/conferences (2 persons)
- Faculty Research Fellowship (one person)
- Field Research Fellowship (one person)

Applications for the above named fellowships were received within the given deadlines. The IDG W-G committee reviewed the applications and made a decision to award the Cornell

Visiting Fellowship for this year to Mr. Uddhav Rai whose Ph.D. dissertation topic is “Food Security and Exclusion among Chepangs in Nepal”. The applications for Faculty Research Fellowship and Field Research Fellowship were reviewed towards the end of June, 2011. The recipients of Faculty Research Fellowship for 2011-012 academic year is Dr. Binod Pokhrel who will be undertaking a research on “Ethnography of the Street Vendors in Kathmandu Valley” while the Field Research Fellowship was awarded to Mr. Pradeep Acharya who has begun his field-research on Pahari community and issues relate to their ethnic identity.

The decisions for allocating travel funds were made during the second week of September only. This year the IDG W-G committee decided to go for cost-sharing modality in allocating the travel grants. Accordingly we were able to provide travel support to four faculty members.

Associate Prof. Chinta Mani Pokharel presented a paper on “Welfare and Wellbeing of Dalits in Nepal” in June at Aarhus University, Denmark. Three faculty members, viz., Prof. Dilli R. Dahal, Prof. Om Gurung and Associate Prof. Laya P. Uprety will be participating in the ANHS First Himalayan Studies Conference to be held at Macalester College, Minnesota from October 28 to 30, 2011. Prof. Dahal will present a paper titled “Social Exclusion in Nepal: A Study of Yadavs in Central Nepal Tarai”; Prof. Gurung’s paper is on “The Question of Indigeneity and Identity in a Federal Nepal” while Dr. Uprety will present a paper on “Marginalization of Indigenous Tharu community in Common Property Resources Management: A Case of Indigenous Irrigation System from the Tarai of Nepal”. ANHS has kindly offered to pay for the accommodation costs during the conference for all three participants from Nepal.

The IDG Funds (Rs. 951,067, equivalent to $ 13,000 @ $1= Rs 73.15) was transferred to TU from CU accounts in September 2011. The remaining funds have already been used for the second CU visitor from Nepal (to pay for the round-trip travel between Kathmandu and Ithaca and stipend for one semester) for Mr. Uddhav Rai. Anthropology Department at Cornell has kindly arranged to pay Mr. Rai’s tuition fees for one semester as well as the additional costs of his health insurance. Mr. Rai has begun his write-up work and studies at Cornell and has informed us that he has been receiving intellectual inputs and advice from Prof. David Holmberg and Prof. Kathryn March.

A revised agreement between CU and TU with regard to financial allocations was signed in April 2011. Following this, the transfer of funds from CU became possible only in September 2011. As a result, we were able to communicate the decisions about the awarding of the fellowships (other than the CU visitor) to the applicants by mid-September only.

The expenses for the Seminar Development Retreat in March 2011 have been covered from the funds allocated for this purpose in the budget for academic year 2011-012. The Central Department continues to have access to internet (through ADSL service). The travel award funds ($ 5500 allocated for 2011-012 and $ 550 carried over from last year) have been spent.

Mr. Suresh Dhakal returned from CU in June. He is now ready to submit his Ph.D. dissertation for internal examination as required by the system at TU. He reports that he obtained valuable intellectual inputs and supports from Prof. David Holmberg and Prof. Kathryn March while at CU. He was also able to use the excellent library facilities at Cornell. Suresh will be making a presentation based on his dissertation research at a talk program in the department in early November 2011.

Mr. Dambar Chemjong is about to complete his research (Faculty Research Fellowship) on ‘Indigenism in the Light of the Identity Politics of Indigenous Peoples in Nepal’ and has agreed to make a presentation at the Department in early November. Similarly, Mr. Ram Chandra Baral has been conducting his Ph.D. dissertation field-research in far-western Nepal among the Tharus with a focus on the impact of (armed) conflict on their traditional social leadership system. [Project title: 'Buhrān Tāpu ko Paramparagat Sāmajik Netritwa Pranāli mā Dwanda ko Prabhāv' i.e., Impact of Conflict on the Traditional Social Leadership System in the Buhrān Island]. Mr. Baral will also be ready to make a presentation of his preliminary findings at the Department in November.

The activities planned for the 2011-012 academic year will be as they are indicated in our IDG proposal. We hope to be able to send the 3rd CU visitor in Fall Semester 2012. At present we are also exploring other sources of funds in order to allow the future CU visitors more study and writing time in the US. The syllabus for the seminar on theories and methods is in the process of being revised and updated for integrating it in the M. Phil. syllabus that is being drafted now.

Annex Call for Applications

"The Dor Bahadur Bista Project for Advanced Training in Anthropology at Tribhuvan University" is operated jointly by the Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology, TU and the Department of Anthropology, Cornell University. This project has been funded by the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research (2010-2014) under the category of Institutional Development Grant (IDG W-G hereafter). The major development goals of the IDG-WG at TU to be achieved over the five year project period are to: 1) Build a curriculum for anthropology Ph.D. students at the Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology where none exists and restructure the Ph.D. program to be departmentally based; 2) Enhance research possibilities for Ph.D. students and faculty in fundamental socio-cultural anthropology; and 3) Increase international exposure and international contributions of faculty and Ph.D. students. Auxiliary goals are to enhance access to electronic resources and to increase library and documentary resources for anthropology Ph.D. students and faculty at the Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology at Tribhuvan University (TU). All these goals will be pursued in collaboration with the Department of Anthropology at Cornell University (CU), USA.

The IDG-WG Committee at TU hereby invites applications for the following fellowships for the academic session 2011-2012:

1. Cornell Exchange Fellowship:

Purpose: This fellowship is intended to provide an opportunity to Ph.D. students in anthropology enrolled at TU to spend one semester at the Department of Anthropology, CU. The recipient of the fellowship can take classes, interact with Faculty and graduate students at CU and more importantly, work full-time on her/his Ph.D. dissertation. This fellowship is primarily a 'dissertation writing grant' and as such the CU visitor is expected to have her/his thesis draft ready for submission after returning from there. CU has agreed to accept one "visiting student" per academic year (i.e., the academic year at CU) with a complete waiver of tuition and fees for one semester. Recipients of Cornell Exchange Fellowships are expected to return to TU after completing the fellowship period. Airfare and all subsistence allowances for one semester will be handled by CU.

Eligibility: The following individuals are eligible to apply for this fellowship:

- a. Anthropology doctoral candidates enrolled at TU*.
- b. Doctoral candidates who are at the advanced stage of their Ph.D. study; in particular those who have completed field-research, data/information analysis and have begun the write-up.
- c. Permanent or full-time contract teaching faculty at TU (includes TU-affiliated campus)*.

Note: Recipients of other categories of grants within the IDG-WG program at TU are also eligible to compete for this fellowship.

Selection Criteria: The applicants who have participated in the Graduate Seminars (on Anthropological Theories and Methods) conducted at the Central Department will be given priority. Besides, young faculty with a proven record of research and research based publications will be given priority. Seniority of the candidates in their TU jobs will only be a consideration when the overall scores obtained by the candidates in the selection process are equal. Priority will be given to:

- a. Young faculty with a proven record of research and publication;
- b. Applicants who have not had the opportunity to study abroad;
- c. Women, Dalit, Disabled, Madhesi and Janajati candidates; and
- d. Other criteria for selection include:
 - i. Written statement of study plan while at CU
 - ii. Draft of the dissertation chapters submitted to the selection committee
 - iii. Oral presentation of preliminary findings from their field research

Recipients of Cornell Exchange Fellowship are expected to:

- a. Make necessary preparations and arrangements so as to arrive at CU by mid-August 2011.

- b. Work closely with an intellectually compatible faculty advisor in anthropology at CU to develop an appropriate write-up plan.
- c. Enroll in an appropriate graduate-level anthropology theory course for credit.
- d. Audit an appropriate introductory/survey course in anthropology and participate in teaching assistant meetings (without teaching or other obligations) to acquire experience in teaching methods.
- e. Participate in a graduate student thesis writers' group.
- f. Take advantage of other resources effectively, including the library, short-term computer and/or teaching workshops, or academic writing seminars, as appropriate.
- g. Have a completed draft of the dissertation by the end of her/his stay at CU.
- h. Make an oral presentation at the Central Department at TU after returning from CU.

Application deadline: All application materials (cover letter, study plan at CU, Updated CV, and documents to support the items bearing asterisk marks) should be submitted by April 25 (Monday), 2011. The application package should be addressed to: Principal Coordinator, IDG W-G; The Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology, TU, Kirtipur. Fellowship amount: $ 9500 plus round trip airfare and health insurance (to be managed by CU).

2. Field Research Fellowship:

Purpose: This fellowship is intended to provide field research support (6 months @ $ 500/month) to Ph.D. candidates in Anthropology and Sociology enrolled at TU.

Eligibility: All doctoral candidates in Anthropology and Sociology are eligible for Field Research Fellowship "if there is a significant ethnographic component" in the proposed research. The applicants must be either permanent or full-time contract teaching faculty at TU (includes TU-affiliated campus). Former recipients of the IDG-WG field research fellowship are not eligible.

Selection Criteria: The applicants who have participated in the Graduate Seminars (on Anthropological Theories and Methods) offered by the Central Department will be given priority. Besides, young faculty with a proven record of research and research based publications will be given priority. Seniority of the candidates in their TU jobs will only be a consideration when the overall scores obtained by the candidates in the selection process are equal. Proposals for Research Fellowships should support the academic interests of the Department of Sociology/Anthropology. Priority will be given to:

- 1) Young faculty with a proven record of research and publication will be given priority.
- 2) Women, Dalit, Disabled, Madhesi and Janajati candidates; and
- 3) Other criteria for selection include:
 - i. M.A. in Anthropology/Sociology*
 - ii. Academic merit/excellence of the research proposal*
 - iii. Completion of Literature Review and Seminar Paper*
 - iv. Oral presentation of the research plan (to the selection committee)
 - v. One who demonstrates that she/he is ready to begin field research
 - vi. Letter of reference/recommendation from the supervisor

The recipients of Field Research Fellowship are expected to devote themselves full-time to their Ph.D. thesis research for not less than six months (within a period of 10 months from the date of receiving the fellowship). They are also expected to publish their research outputs in significant peer-reviewed journals besides using the data/information for their Ph.D. thesis. One Field Research Fellowship will be awarded in each academic year.

Application deadline: All application materials (a cover letter, research proposal, field research plan and instruments, updated CV, and documents to support the items bearing asterisk marks) should be submitted by June 15 (Wednesday), 2011. The application package should be addressed to: Principal Coordinator, IDG; The Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology, TU, Kirtipur. Fellowship amount: $ 3000.

3. Travel Grants for Faculty

Purpose: The purpose of the Travel Grants for faculty is to enable them to present papers in the anthropological conferences and/or seminars like annual meetings of Anthropological Association of America, Annual South Asia Conference (Wisconsin), Asian Studies Association, Society for Applied Anthropology, SOAS, Annual Anthropology seminar at Bonn, International Conference on Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences, etc. A total of 2-3 international travel grants (within the limits of the available funds for this purpose) can be awarded during the current academic year (August 2011 to July 2012).

Eligibility: Permanent and full-time contract teaching faculty in anthropology and sociology at TU are eligible to apply. Priority will be given to the faculty (including Women, Dalit, Disabled, Madhesi and Janajati candidates) employed at the Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology. IDG-WG Committee members can also compete for the travel grant.

The selection criteria include:

- a) Acceptance of the abstract and/or paper by the conference organizers*
- b) Invitation letter received by the applicant*
- c) Submission of draft paper to the IDG committee*
- d) Priority to be given to Anthropological conference/seminar participation
- e) Commitment to publish the paper in a scholarly outlet
- f) Financial Aspects: Recipients are expected to make the most economical arrangements possible and seek co-funding from other sources (e.g., apply for any financial assistance available from the conference organizers). Recipients will be informed clearly how much support they will receive and no further reimbursement will be possible.

Note: If a member of the selection committee is applying for a Travel Grant, that member must not be involved in the selection process.

Application deadline: The application materials should be submitted at least 3 months before the scheduled dates for the conference/seminar in question. The application should include a cover letter giving details about the conference, draft of the paper to be presented at the conference/seminar, and documents to support the items in the eligibility criteria that bear asterisk marks). The application package should be addressed to: Principal Coordinator, IDG; The Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology, TU, Kirtipur.

4. Research Fellowships for Faculty:

Purpose: The purpose of this fellowship is to provide opportunities to the anthropology teaching faculty to undertake basic research projects

Eligibility: Permanent anthropology teaching faculty employed at the Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology are eligible to apply. IDG-WG Committee members cannot apply for this grant during the academic year 2011-2012. This fellowship will support only field-work based research projects. The selection criteria include:

- i. Academic merit of the Research Proposal
- ii. Benefit to the institution and the discipline
- iii. Feasibility of the research project/plan

Priority will be given to senior faculty from the Central Department. Recipients of 3-month Research Fellowships are expected to: a) engage in research full-time [spend at least 3 months full-time on the proposed research project related work within a period of six months from the date the fellowship is awarded]; b) submit a draft of the research output to the IDG-WG committee after the completion of the project; and b) publish their research outputs in significant peer-reviewed journals. One three-month Research Fellowship will be awarded in each academic year.

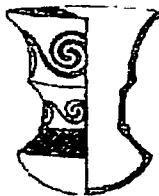

Application deadline: All application materials (a cover letter, research proposal with a work plan, letter of support from the department, and an updated CV) should be submitted by June 15 (Wednesday), 2011. It should be addressed to: Principal Coordinator, IDG; The Central Department of Sociology/Anthropology, TU, Kirtipur. Fellowship amount: $ 3000.

On November 16, 2010 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $125,000 to the Archaeological Studies Program (ASP) at the University of the Philippines. The grant is to provide assistance to ASP to develop an archaeological science based PhD program at the University of the Philippines. This goal is both challenging in terms of physical and human resources as investing in them with limited funding sources has always been a predicament. In meeting this challenge, the ASP faculty has developed a program that will initiate a new laboratory or expand existing ones and developing the human resources through the training of PhD students with the skills and research capability of specific archaeological science approaches. The program entails that every year a specific laboratory will be the focus of development through the procurement of necessary equipment, supporting the training and research of a PhD student in collaboration with our expert/specialist/colleague/s. At the end of the IDG program, ASP will be having five functional laboratories, manned by capable personnel with PhDs, that will be used to train prospective PhD students working in the Southeast Asian Region.

The grant covers the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2015. The grant is being disbursed in five annual installments of $25,000. The first annual $25,000 installment for the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2011 was made on January 11, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting for the 2011 installment were received in January 2012 and are attached to this tax return.

Mid-Year Report for the 2011 Wenner Gren Foundation Institutional Development Grant

For 2011, the UP ASP-Wenner Gren IDG is focus on developing the Human Osteology/ Palaeoanthropology Laboratory and supporting a PhD student on that topic.

Mr Jack Medrana is this year's recipient of the PhD research grant to pursue his PhD Thesis/research entitled: Adult Health in Marinduque until the end of the Spanish Colonial Period.

During the first part of the year, the work was focus on the procuring the cast and equipments for the Human Osteology Lab and the Post Graduate Student Lounge. The other activities are the development of the curriculum for the work shop and the invitations for the Southeast Asia students who will attend it.

For the development of the laboratory, four hominid fossil cast, a human foot bone (Callao MT3) and a set of disarticulated human skeleton (resin) were procured. Equipments for the lab such as callipers, osteometric boards and a portable 3 D scanner with a dedicated computer were also purchased.

The workshop entitled Human Evolution: Concepts and Methods in Palaeoanthropology was conducted last July 25 to 30, 2011 at the Human Osteology lab of ASP. This was facilitated by Dr Florent Detroit, the Specialist Fellow for the year. Three master students from Southeast Asia participated in the workshop and they are Ms Chonchanok Samrit, and Mr. Borisut Boriphon from Thailand, and Mr Sofwan Noerwidi from Indonesia. About 17 Filipino students also attended the workshop.

During the period when Dr Detroit was in Manila, Mr Medrana had a continuous consultation with him on his research project.

For the rest of year 1, the program will continue to procure 1 or 2 more cast and some more equipment such as precision calipers for measuring teeth, goniometers and bone cleaning equipments. We will also try to get the subscription to three scientific journals. Planning and consultation for the year 2 program is on going with the identification of a PhD student and a meeting with the Specialist Fellow (Dr Anne Marie Semah) on Palaeo-Botany.

On November 14, 2011 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $125,000 to the Department of Anthropology at the Vietnam National University (VNU), Hanoi. The grant provides assistance to the Department of Anthropology in its efforts to become the leading center for anthropological training and research in Vietnam. VNU goal is to build a doctoral program in anthropology in Vietnam, which includes the creation of a research-oriented academic environment, faculty and student training, and acquiring adequate learning resources to support doctoral training and research. In order to meet these goals, VNU plans to carry out the following activities. 1) development of a first-rate doctoral curriculum in anthropology, 2) networking including a webpage for the department, 3) purchase of study materials, 4) teaching courses, 5) faculty training, 6) fieldwork support, 7) translation and publication of collections on key issues in anthropology, and 8) strengthen and improve seminar series.

The grant covers the period January 1, 2012 through December 31, 2016. The first annual $25,000 installment for the period January 1, 2012 through December 31, 2012 was made on November 29, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting for the 2012 installment are due January 2013.

1. On August 14, 2008 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $65,000 to the Royal Anthropological Institute to support the Royal Anthropological Institute's (RAI) Urgent Anthropology Fellowship Program. The objective of the Urgent Anthropology Fellowship Program is to support ethnographic research on disappearing or threatened cultures and languages that will make a fundamental contribution to anthropological knowledge and serve, where appropriate, as an aid to indigenous peoples in their efforts to control their own destinies

The grant covers funding for two fellowships. $35,000 will support Dr. Thomas Thornton, whose project focuses on the effects of rapid climate change on indigenous Northern coastal peoples with particular reference to marine food resources and indigenous knowledge. $30,000 will support Dr. Rahile Dawut to conduct a study of threatened religious narratives of the Uyghur people of Xinjiang region, China. The final reports on the Thornton and Dawut fellowships were received on June 30, 2011 and are attached. To the best knowledge of the Wenner-Gren Foundation, the grantee has not diverted any funds from the purpose of the grant.

2. On November 10, 2009 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $29,000 to the Royal Anthropological Institute to support the RAI's Urgent Anthropology Fellowship Program. The 2009 grant covers a fellowship to Dr. Simron Jit Singh for his project "Anthropological and ethnological research and documentation among the inhabitants of the Nicobar Islands". The Project was prepared with the following objectives of 1) provide further support in the rehabilitation process on the Nicobar Island, 2) prepare a selection of scientific publications, and 3) prepare a digital archive for access by the Nicobarese community. The final report on this fellowship was received on December 25, 2011 and is attached. To the best knowledge of the Wenner-Gren Foundation, the grantee has not diverted any funds from the purpose of the grant.
3. On January 20, 2011 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $52,250 to the Royal Anthropological Institute to support the RAI's Urgent Anthropology Fellowship Program. The 2011 grant covers a fellowship to Dr. Peter Loovers, who will conduct research in circumpolar Canada, in particular along the Peel River and the Peel River watershed. The project is partly about the possibilities of Teet'it Gwich'in language revitalization, partly about the relationship between memory, poetics and land on their territory. It is a particularly urgent project because the Peel River is under threat of development from mining. The final report on the Loovers fellowship was received in August 2012 and is attached. To the best knowledge of the Wenner-Gren Foundation, the grantee has not diverted any funds from the purpose of the grant

Project Report: Using Local Knowledge to Assess Environmental Change and Restoration in Coastal Marine Ecosystems

From: Thomas F. Thornton, RAI Fellow in Urgent Anthropology, 2008-10

Date: 28 June 2011

Subject: Final Report on the RAI Fellowship in Urgent Anthropology

I began my RAI Fellowship in Urgent Anthropology on 1 November 2008 and issued my last interim report in June 2010 along with a request for a no-cost extension. This final report summarizes my activities in the final year of the fellowship and synthesizes the overall findings, outputs (to date and planned), and impacts.

Overall, the RAI fellowship has provided important intellectual and collaborative space to work on what I have come to believe is one of the most important adaptive challenges in our future: cultivating healthy coastal marine ecosystems. The failures of fisheries and coastal ecosystem management are nearly everywhere apparent on earth. Coastal zone areas, which support the largest, most densely-settled human populations, are under increasing threats from climate change, development, pollution, and other impacts. Slowly, we are beginning to realize the totality and integrated nature of these effects and effort is shifting away from single species, maximum sustained yield fisheries and conservation policies towards more ecosystem-oriented and integrated coastal zone planning, regulation, and governance. But the shift is slow, and a critical resource in understanding the historical ecology and local dynamics of particular marinescapes is being neglected: Local and Traditional Knowledge (LTK). My RAI fellowship project, "Using Local Knowledge to Assess Environmental Change and Restoration in Coastal Marine Ecosystems," has aimed to redress this deficiency by looking not only at the ways LTK can contribute not only to the socio-ecological content and status of marine ecosystems overtime but also to the very conceptualization of marine ecosystems, themselves, as marinescapes.

My study area has been the North Pacific, starting with Southeast Alaska, where I have completed detailed ethnographic studies of Tlingit perceptions, use, and assessments of key marinescapes, and radiating outward to British Columbia, Russia (Sakhalin Island), and Japan. I have also used my time in England to take a comparative historical-ecological view of North Atlantic marine ecosystems, especially those associated with herring, a foundation species and keystone biological and cultural species in both the Atlantic (Clupea harengus) and Pacific (Clupea pallasi). This has lead to collateral research, site visits and interviewing about key marinescapes in Western England and Scotland, Iceland, and (to a lesser extent) Norway. There are clear parallels in both oceanic bioregions in terms of the intensive development of commercial herring fisheries and their subsequent declines (or collapses) due regulatory failures exacerbated by other environmental changes, including oceanic oscillation cycles (Hamilton, et al 2006) and changes in non-human predator populations (Thornton, et al 2010). Understanding these changes obviously requires combining knowledge at different scales, from the local to the regional to the global. I have chosen to focus on local marine ecosystems since that is the scale at which LTK tends to adhere. However, in collaboration with others, I have also sought to aggregate to the bioregional level to understand larger and cumulative factors affecting the North Pacific biocultural region.

Similarly, it is important not to limit LTK to simple data ‘points’ or general observations, but rather to understand knowledge is produced, distributed, integrated, and maintained (or not) within particular marinescapes. I have begun to do this in Southeast Alaska by pursuing a mapping of key marinescapes as defined by indigenous Tlingit and Haida oral histories, toponymies, and land and resource claims and use patterns. This approach has proved very fruitful in providing a more fine-grained perspective on marine ecozone designations (currently very generalized in Alaska), critical biodiversity and abiotic ‘hotspots,’ refugia, and traditional forms of marine ecosystem cultivation, governance, and restoration (following environmental change events). While some marinescapes correlate with management areas defined by state fisheries and habitat managers, others do not, and suggest closer scrutiny and potential realignment according to the indigenous boundaries. In addition, while some marinescapes have changed dramatically, others have remained relatively stable and sustainable over time. By recognizing these patterns, I posit that indigenous marinescapes can be a critical component in evolving marine ecosystem spatial planning, restoration, and governance.

Key activities, outputs (out or in progress), and impacts since my last report, include the following:

- Summer 2010. Fieldwork in Southeast Alaska. The Alaska fieldwork included mapping a key marinescape in Sitka Sound associated with herring spawning and subsistence harvests of herring eggs and a range of other ecosystem and cultural services. Sitka’s herring stocks are in a restoration phase due to overfishing, degradation of key spawning and rearing habitat, and other environmental factors. Yet, it remains the most important herring fishery in the state for commercial sac roe and subsistence egg harvests. Fellowship funds were used to support my collaboration on the project with the Sitka Tribe of Alaska, especially the tribal fisheries biologist and the head of the Tribes herring committee. The mapping helped to bolster a case the Tribe is making for a federally-designated ‘subsistence only’ harvest area within the marinescape, and laid the groundwork for producing a jointly authored paper (in progress), entitled “Redefining Sitka Sound Marinesscapes and Ecosystem Management” on how to restore the Sitka Sound marinescape to its historical (early 20th century) productivity. The paper argues that such restoration would be beneficial for both commercial (primarily non-Native permit holders) and subsistence fishers (primarily Native) as well as other key non-human species, such as seals, sea lions, whales, halibut, salmon, and seabirds (all but sea lions and seabirds also critical to Native subsistence). Such an approach could have a significant impact on the biocultural health of one of largest rural communities in the North Pacific.
- Autumn 2010. Completed book chapter entitled “Language and landscape among the Tlingit” (recently published in Landscape in Language: Transdisciplinary Perspectives, edited by D. M. Mark, et al., John Benjamin’s Publishing Co., 2011). This essay develops the concept of marinescapes within a larger theoretical discussion of landscape cognition and ‘ecotopes’ as they relate to 4 processes: how a place is perceived, what it affords, how it is accommodated in practice, and what constitutes its controlling forces (physiographic and biospiritual). I also conducted further fieldwork in central Siberia in September-October, as part of related project (funded by the National Science Foundation through the International Polar Year initiative) on Circumpolar Land Use and Ethnicity. Unfortunately, I was not able to extend the trip, as hoped, to conduct further fieldwork in Sakhalin Island, though some valuable data was obtained from colleagues at the Russian Academy of Sciences and several agencies and NGOs on coastal Siberian management and conflict issues, including recent concerns about herring declines and “die offs” and declining quality harbor seals which some local people connect with oil and gas development impacts in the regions.

- Autumn and winter 2010-11. Submission and revisions of two collaborative articles concerning Pacific herring: 1) “Local and Traditional Knowledge and the Historical Ecology of Pacific Herring” (now published in Journal of Ecological Anthropology Vol. 14 No. 1.) and 2) “Framing, Events, and Shifting Baselines in Marine Ecology: The Case of Southeast Alaska Herring” (currently being revised for publication in a major journal). These articles are designed to translate results of our LTK work on herring into meaningful and tractable policy solutions for improving marine ecosystem management in the Gulf of Alaska and beyond. I argue that the process must begin with a proper conceptualization of the marinescape itself, including not just the offshore waters but also the intertidal and inland habitats that contribute to its perceptual salience, ecosystem services, and cultural support functions.
- Winter 2011. A tentative research plan for returning to Siberia was developed with Russian colleagues, either for Spring (herring season) or Autumn 2011. Autumn has proved to be the more amenable time, so the trip will not be supported by the fellowship, though the background research on Nivkh, Nenet, Evenki, and Uilta and other local people’s marinescapes has been supported by fellowship funds and will contribute to the ongoing effort to map these ecosystems and assess their changes (biological and cultural) over time.
- Spring 2011. Participated in the Sitka Sound herring egg fishery with Tlingit elders. This is the fourth year in a row I have been able to participate in this fishery, but the first time I have been able to be present at the end of the spawning. This is the time when some Tlingit harvesters are active in transplanting “thinly coated” hemlock branches (laid down as substrate for herring spawn) to areas they think offer a more viable habitat for gestation, or which they seek to restore as productive spawning grounds. Branches thinly coated with eggs are considered both less desirable for eating and more viable for reproduction since all of the eggs are likely to be fertilized with milt (unlike thickly laid eggs the innermost layers of which may not be fertilized).

I also gave an invited lecture at the newly formed “Herring School- Hakai Network for Coastal People, Ecosystems and Management” at Simon Fraser University on my herring and marinescape research in Southeast Alaska. This proved to be an ideal venue for scaling up the work done in Southeast Alaska to the bioregional level of the eastern North Pacific, where herring stock management is being increasingly questioned by both indigenous peoples and scientists. A follow-up “Herring Workshop,” to which I’ve been invited to speak, “will bring together knowledge-holders from diverse communities to discuss the cultural, social, ecological, and economic role of herring on the West Coast - from Alaska through BC to Washington. Participants will include both those based in local and traditional knowledge and those based in western science.” This will provide a regional perspective on herring history, science, management and cultural context not otherwise compiled in a single place “in order to increase awareness, engage a broader scientific community, establish key research and management needs, and produce a declaration, co-authored by scientists and traditional knowledge experts about the state of herring.”

In addition I gave conference paper at the American Association of Geographers meeting in Seattle, entitled “Forests and Fish: Property and Resource Rights Among Indigenous Peoples of the Russian and US Pacific Littoral,” on the importance of marinescapes among the Tlingit and Nivkh peoples, and the role of tenure insecurity and environmental circumscription in reducing not only their sovereignty and rights but also the health of the forest and marine ecosystems upon which they still depend to a large degree. This paper has been incorporated into a book proposal by the session organizers.

Finally, in May I organized a major workshop on the “Cultivation of Marinescapes on the North Pacific Coast” for the 2nd International Marine Conservation Congress in Victoria, British Columbia. I also presented two papers, one co-authored with Robert Boyd (of Portland State University) on “Evidence for Salmon Transplant in Traditional Northwest Coast Native Cultures” and one single-authored “Transplantation Techniques for Pacific Herring (Clupea pallasii) among the Tlingit and Haida of Southeast Alaska.” The workshop, involving archeologists, anthropologists, fisheries scientists and First Nations representatives from Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Alaska, and Japan was an effort to stimulate interest and collaboration on research across a range of disciplines and settings that is turning up evidence of cultivation of diverse of marine and riverine environments and resources from invertebrates (e.g., clam gardens) to salmon (e.g., transplantation, streamscaping) and herring (transplantation, etc.). The precision, scope, and scale at which indigenous peoples cultivated marine environments is significant and largely unrecognized and unacknowledged for its role in maintaining and even enhancing marinescape productivity. A book or special issue on this workshop is planned.

- Spring-Summer 2011. I attended the International Congress of Arctic Social Sciences (ICASS) in Akureryi, Iceland, and gave a paper on Alaska Native corporate models of environmental management (which must, ironically, focus on marginal uplands rather than their traditional marine coastal base due to loss of aboriginal marine rights in the 1971 Alaska Native land claims settlement). I also visited the town of Siglufjordur which was once the “herring capital of the world” (although Sitka would contest for this distinction, perhaps) until the fishery collapsed in the mid 1960s due to fishing and other environmental stress (related to the North Atlantic Oscillation). Today there is a museum that chronicles the rise and fall of this herring mecca, which holds important lessons for all herring fisheries (as does Japan’s and Alaska-Canada’s earlier experiences with collapse). I interviewed several of the museum staff and looked at their collections and archives on Atlantic (Iceland-Norway) herring. I also helped initiate and joined a new working group on the “North Pacific Bioregion” to be housed, potentially, under the International Arctic Social Sciences Association (IASSA).

- Finally, I have begun to write-up my fellowship research into a book chapter for the upcoming volume on Urgent Anthropology, edited by Raj Puri. The working title for the chapter is my project title. In the collaborative spirit of my project, I have sought joint authors from Alaska, British Columbia, Japan, and Russia to give appropriate voice and insight to the unity and diversity of marinescapes--from Sitka Alaska's "Herring Rock" and "Fish Jumping Around" Islands to the "Herring Forests" of Hokkaido, Japan —and their foundational role in our collective ecological and cultural heritage.

Thank you again for providing the opportunity and support to carry out this project. It has been a most illuminating experience and one that has very much help advanced my thinking on the critical issue of marine ecosystem conservation and governance in conjunction with other scholars and with indigenous communities directly linked to the fates of these environments. In era of general awakening to these issues, incorporating meaningful local knowledge of the boundaries, historical (and shifting) baselines, and cultivation techniques relevant to key cultural marinescapes has the potential to help achieve an urgent anthropological objective: improving marine ecosystems and their conservation through awareness of local knowledge and practices.

Project Report: Documenting Religious Narratives of the Uyghurs in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, China

Rahile Dawut

Center for Anthropology and Folklore

School of the Humanities

Xinjiang University

Ürümqi, China

I would like first of all to express my thanks to the Anthropologists' Fund for Urgent Anthropological Research, the Wenner-Gren Foundation, the Royal Anthropological Institute and the Anthropology Department of Kent University. Without their continuing generous support, this project would have been unthinkable. Thanks to the initiative and help of these institutions, important parts of the Uyghur people's religious narratives have been identified and collected. Moreover, these narratives will be archived and preserved for future generations of Uyghurs, as well as researchers and scholars from around the world, to learn from and enjoy.

I was awarded the Urgent Anthropology Fellowship in 2008 based on a proposal entitled "Documenting the Disappearing and Threatened Religious Narratives of Uyghurs in Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, China." The fellowship was very timely for my own research and for my community, as a number of our religious practices are quickly disappearing. This project has given my research assistants and myself an opportunity to record, as quickly as possible, the religious practices, narratives, and rituals which are still performed among the Uyghurs. Through the fieldwork, transcription, and digitalisation activities we performed with grant funds, we have come to learn a great deal of endangered local religious knowledge, improving our understanding of the religious life of Xinjiang Uyghurs.

The duration of my fellowship lasted sixteen months, beginning in September 2008 and lasting until December 2009. I took on research assistants from among the graduate students in the Folklore program at Xinjiang University to work with me on five components of this project: (1) fieldwork; (2) digitalisation of materials; (3) transcription and translation of recordings; (4) production of ethnographic film; and (5) distribution of research. I budgeted fellowship funds in such a way as to support work for an even longer period than the grant initially stipulated, and so my work on the project of documenting Uyghur religious narratives has continued into 2011.

Fieldwork

Beginning in 2008, my research assistants and I performed fieldwork for this project in the districts of Turpan, Qomul, Xoten, and Kashgar, each of which consists of a large number of villages and towns surrounding the larger city which gives its name to the respective district. Unfortunately, various circumstances in China—and in Xinjiang in particular—affected our ability to perform fieldwork in certain parts of the region. After the July 5, 2009 riots in Urumqi, leaving the city to conduct field research in rural areas became very difficult. We had to postpone some of our fieldwork because of the harsh political situation in the region. Moreover, the Internet was completely inaccessible in Xinjiang from July 2009 to June 2010. Nevertheless, despite these various obstacles and limitations, we did our best to document voices from the practitioners of the disappearing Uyghur religious culture. Our research trips proved unanimously to be fruitful, helping us to understand and allowing us to document the traditional Islamic lifeways of Xinjiang Uyghurs.

I had two broad objectives for the fieldwork component of the fellowship period. The first was objective was to document mazar (shrine) pilgrimage in Xoten and Kashgar. The mazar is an important religious institution for the Uyghurs in Xinjiang. Mazar pilgrimage refers to the practice of making journeys to the shrines which are scattered around the deserts and oasis towns of Xinjiang, particularly in the southern part of the region. The mazars, where famous people like religious figures, scholars, and saints are laid to rest, are the sites of pilgrimage in part because people believe that visiting, praying, and taking part in religious activities there have the power to cure infertility and disease, as well as to avert natural and other disasters. Pilgrimage also serves as an assertion of religious faith and a significant social activity for the tens of thousands of pilgrims who come annually to festivals held at the mazars. Since shrine visitation has been regarded as “superstition,” a form of “illegal religious activity,” and subsequently banned in many locales throughout Xinjiang, there is a two-fold problem: (1) that spaces for performing Islamic tradition have begun to disappear; and (2) that these disappearing mazars, as well as the various activities performed at them, have gone unrecorded until now.

From May 2008 to March 2011, my research assistants and I travelled numerous times to Kashgar and Xoten in order to document mazars and related activities. In Kashgar we documented more than one hundred mazars. We concentrated primarily on collecting written and oral histories related to the mazars, as well as on describing both their material culture and spiritual dimensions. In Xoten we focused extensively on documenting one of the last existing annual mazar festivals in Xinjiang, that held at the Imam Asim Mazar. The Imam Asim Festival is held every May, running from Wednesday to Friday for five weeks at the tomb of Imam Asim, an eleventh-century Islamic martyr who died, according to local legends, in a battle with the Xoten Uyghur Buddhists. Other than pilgrimage, mazar festival activity also includes entertainments such as wrestling, story-telling, tightrope-walking, cock- and dog-fighting, and goat-tussling. The normally deserted mazar site becomes crowded during the festival. Bazaars are set up to provide food and other services, and the festival serves as a space for Uyghurs from various places to meet each other and exchange information while also performing religious activities. Each May from 2008 until 2011, we attended and documented the Imam Asim mazar festival using audiovisual recording technology. We focused closely on recording the performances of dastans (oral epic narratives) at the festival and were able to record fifteen epic tales from five different folk performers.

The second broad objective of the fieldwork component of this project was to document the music and rituals of the Sufi sisterhoods of Xinjiang Uyghur women. In a manner similar to mazar pilgrimage and other religious activities, Sufi sisterhoods and their rituals have been regarded as “illegal” and “superstitious” and thus banned in many areas. The cultural-religious spaces in which these sisterhoods have long met, along with the actual religious practices associated with them, are quickly disappearing. In response, a number of Sufi sisterhoods have begun to meet and perform their rituals underground. From November 2008 to December 2010, we took a number of research trips to various cities to document the practices, narratives, and rituals which are still performed among the Sufi sisterhoods. In order to obtain the most comprehensive record of women Sufi practices possible, we carried out ethnographic research in two traditional Uyghur centers, Kashgar and Turpan. In Kashgar we focused on documenting two women’s groups, first in November 2008 and a second time in August 2010. In Turpan we documented the activities of one Sufi sisterhood and, additionally, a Sufi brotherhood, for the first time in October 2009 and a second time in December 2010. In each of these cases, we recorded various ritual activities, including the performance of songs, chants, narratives, dance, and other forms of artistic expression.

In total, our fieldwork produced more than 100 recorded hours of oral histories, performances by epic folk singers, and the activities of Sufi sisterhoods and brotherhoods.

Digitalisation of materials

We have also done our best to archive and digitalise as quickly as possible the materials we have compiled after each one of our field research trips. Since our video documentation comes from different Sufi groups and mazars in different areas, we have been concerned with how to organise these rough materials.

The recordings my team has gathered are the first audiovisual records of these oral narratives and songs, and the accompanying Chinese and English translations are also the first of their kind. In order to document and archive folk performance while the tradition is still relatively vibrant, we have set aside a great deal of time in order to carry out detailed and intensive ethnography, allowing us to create as comprehensive a record as possible of these unique folk narratives and their performance.

Until now no one has attempted to collect and order the religious songs of Sufi women. In the case of folk dastans, not even one part of the folk dastans has been recorded using audiovisual technologies. Previously no one has given importance to the systematic ordering and collection of these texts. We, however, took it as an important task to carefully record the texts, photographs, audio, and video related to each dastan and, moreover, to digitally archive these various forms of media. We took the same approach to digitalizing the activities of Sufi women's song. For example, our fieldwork from Turpan includes more than 40 files of text, photography, and audiovisual recordings. Additionally, we recorded and saved the personal histories of each singer and oral performer, as well as the histories of a portion of the narratives. Through this work we arranged many of the rough materials from our fieldwork, making them easy to access in the future. We have fully edited and organized our interview materials and are currently using them as a teaching resource in addition to using them for research purposes.

Transcription and translation of recordings

The second stage of our project involved two time-consuming steps: first, transcribing epics and songs; and second, translating the Uyghur transcripts into both Chinese and English. Up to the present day, we have spent a significant amount of time on this component of the project. My research assistants have worked tirelessly to produce two transcriptions of each work: one in standard Uyghur, and another in local dialect. We have also undertaken a great deal of feedback research (in the form of re-visiting and talking with performers about the meanings of specific words and phrases) and philological research to define and annotate archaic and/or dialect-specific words which are either no longer in use in modern Uyghur or so locally specialized as to be unrecognizable to speakers of Uyghur from areas other than those where the epics and songs were recorded.

We also selected representative works from among the corpus of our recordings to translate into Chinese and English. At this point in time we have translated eight dastans into English and four of them into Chinese. To ensure the accuracy and quality of English-language translations, we invited native English speakers Joshua Freeman, a graduate student at Xinjiang Normal University, and Elise Anderson, a Ph.D. student from Indiana University (USA), to translate alongside our Uyghur graduate students. As far as we know, this is the first major attempt to translate Uyghur epic narratives into English and Chinese.

Production of Ethnographic Film

One of my initial goals in undertaking this project was to make knowledge of Uyghur Islamic artistic traditions more readily available among the Uyghur population and the world community. My aim in so doing, alongside preserving the traditions, was to enable more people at home and abroad to learn about and enjoy our religious narrative traditions. We have chosen the finest examples from among our recordings and are working to produce those films with subtitles in Uyghur, English, and Chinese. Neither my students nor myself have formal training in film-making, audio production, or film editing, but have been learning these skills, along with international technical standards and archival norms, throughout the course of the grant period.

At the present time, we have produced four documentary films, all with English subtitles. The first documentary is about mazar pilgrimage. This video focuses on the Imam Asim Festival held annually in May, showing the range of religious and other activities that take place there. It lasts approximately one hour in length.

Our second documentary features Sufi rituals in rural Turpan. Caliph (Sheikh) Qasim was a famous Sufi sheikh of Karsan Neighborhood in Yalquntagh Village who died on December 17, 1992. For each of the past seventeen years, several thousand of his followers from Turpan and the surrounding region have gathered on the anniversary of his death to express their respect for and faithfulness to the Sheikh with a great mourning ceremony at his grave and the house where he lived. For this video, we conducted several interviews as well as documented all the rituals performed on this day. The film, which allows a glimpse into the particular practices of a Khafiya Sufi order, is about 50 minutes in length.

Third among our documentaries is a film focusing on the Sufi sisterhood of one of the counties in Turpan. This 35-minute film, which is comprised largely of interviews, concentrates primarily on what kind of role the women's Sufi master and followers play in the daily life of the people in this county.

Our fourth documentary is about dastan among Xinjiang Uyghurs. Dastan, an important form of oral literature among all the Turkic peoples, utilizes both poetry and prose recitation to dramatically recount events from the past. With their great length, complex subject matter, and intricate performance style, dastan place great demands on the professionals who perform them, known as dastanchi. Poetic sections of dastan are typically set to music, and most dastanchi accompany their own performance on traditional Uyghur instruments like the rawap, dutar, and tembur.

Distribution of Research

So far I have published three articles on the basis of my research and have also prepared a book titled Mazars in Kashgar. In this book I introduce 100 mazars in the Kashgar region according to our fieldwork research there. I am currently working on a paper exploring the significance of women's Sufi groups in rural community life. We also have plans to make a Xinjiang region-wide mazar database in the future.

Additionally, I have presented findings from this research at several international scholarly conferences. In June 2009 I gave a paper at the "Islam in China" conference in Vienna, Austria; in October 2010, at the second international conference "Dialogues between Islam and Christianity" in Beijing, China; and at the "Archiving Orality & Connecting with Communities: World Oral Literature Project Workshop” at Cambridge University (UK) in December 2010. In each of these cases my papers were well received, and I was able to engage in useful dialogue with my colleagues.

We have also given special consideration to collecting and distributing collections of these works to Uyghur people in Xinjiang. From May 5-6, 2011, we held the “Scholarly Conference on Uyghur Folk Dastans and Dastan Performance” at Xinjiang University. We invited twelve dastanchis from Kasghar, Xoten, and Qumul to this meeting; they performed dastans for the nearly 300 people, including more than 80 researchers from around Xinjiang, who attended. Following the conference, the dastanchis held a special performance for our students, giving them a chance to experience the art of performing dastans.

We also invited reporters from Xinjiang television, radio, and newspapers to the meeting, who in turn used their respective media to introduce dastans to people in Xinjiang. The Xinjiang television station, for example, made a film about the dastan performers. Through this kind of publicity, Xinjiang citizens have been able to learn about the importance of enjoying this art. The meeting and subsequent publicity were an excellent opportunity to elevate the position of dastanchis while introducing their art. This was the first opportunity for the dastanchis to display their skill in a university setting; they were all greatly impacted by the opportunity.

We are now in the process of selecting the most remarkable works from among those we recorded to include in tri-lingual (Uyghur, English, and Chinese) videos and an accompanying book. We are hopeful that we will be able to publish the book within the next year and hope that this book will promote local understanding and enjoyment of oral performance.

Ideally, we would like to make public the finest examples from among the Sufi poetry we have recorded. Sufism is still a sensitive topic in China, however, and government policy in Xinjiang forbids the unauthorized distribution of religious-themed books and electronic media. Many of the dastan in our collection deal with religious themes; even those whose foci are not directly religious are often preceded or followed by prayers or Sufi poetry. So while many Uyghurs would be particularly interested in hearing dastan or Sufi songs of this sort, we have little opportunity to pursue publication of these works. Even on-line publication (we are currently exploring the possibility of putting our materials on a website) could potentially create problems both for us and for the artists whose performances we have recorded. We are currently exploring our best options.

Conclusions

This fellowship period marked my first foray into research in documentation. Throughout the duration of the project, my research assistants and I have given special emphasis to fieldwork as a means of capturing folk performance as much as possible within the context of its original culture space; to the simultaneous preparation and preservation of video, audio, and textual records; to transcription and translation; and to distributing our research results at home and abroad. We have worked hard to do the best work possible for this program, though admittedly we really struggled with wondering whether our work met international standards as a result of the low level of scholarly research and access to materials in Xinjiang.

The fact that I write this paper as a “final report” does not mean that our work collecting religious texts, songs, chants, dances, and other forms of artistic expression among the Uyghurs is done. Xinjiang is a vast land, with Uyghurs scattered throughout the region. While we are very happy to have completed the work of documenting a representative sample of these religious narratives before they disappear, we also know that many other aspects of religious culture and ceremony await our further documentation and research. We will work continuously to find ways to preserve these traditions.

Special thanks

I am most grateful to the trustees of the Royal Anthropological Institute for awarding me the RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship. The projects I was able to undertake during this fellowship period have brought great personal and professional rewards. From the start to the finish of this project, I had the RAI's help, and I would like to say a special thank you to Hilary Callan, David Shankland, Christine Patel, Susanna Hammacher, Amanda Vinson.

I also want to mention here that my interaction with colleagues at the School of Anthropology and Conservation at Kent University was extremely useful in the development of my project. I was in residence at the School of Anthropology and Conservation, Kent University from January 20 to March 23, 2011. There I benefited greatly from the help of Dr. Rajendra K. Puri and secretary Susan j Simpson. Michael Poltorak, in the visual anthropology program at Kent, gave me a great deal of specialized help. I also got useful feedback from students and instructors in visual anthropology when I showed them the films we have made. Additionally, filmmaker and former visual anthropology instructor Karen Boswall gave me a useful advice upon seeing my films. I learned a great deal from viewing films in the Anthropology Department film archive, as well as at the archive of the Royal Anthropology Institute. I also found some useful materials related to Sufism, pilgrimage, and Central Asian Studies in the Kent University Library.

I also thank Joshua Freeman and Elise Anderson for their work on the difficult task of translating materials from Uyghur into English.

Ref: Final activity report for the 2009 – 2011 RAI Fellowship in Urgent Anthropology

Dear Dr. Shankland,

Please find enclosed the final activity report of the RAI Fellowship in Urgent Anthropology (2009 – 2011) attached to Kent University, Canterbury, U.K.

My engagement with the Nicobar Islands that began in April 1999 took an unfortunate turn with the 2004 tsunami, rapidly transforming the culture and society of the Nicobarese. While change is inevitable, whatever be the reasons, the RAI fellowship was timely in helping me to accompany the islands in the process of change and in documenting it to the extent possible, which I hope, will prove to be invaluable for times to come.

Thank you very much for your support!

Warmly,

Simron Jit Singh

Final Activity report, October 2009 – December 2011

Simron Jit Singh

RAI Fellow in Urgent Anthropology (2009 – 2011)

School of Anthropology and Conservation, Kent University, U.K

In Brief

The 2009 – 2011 RAI fellowship in Urgent Anthropology was granted to Dr. Simron Jit Singh for research and documentation of the Nicobarese life and culture severely disrupted by the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami. Singh had researched the Nicobar Islands since 1999 and was privy to their past and on-going processes of change in the aftermath following overwhelming aid from outside. The fellowship was instrumental in enabling Singh to support the rehabilitation process in his capacity as advisor to the Austrian based Sustainable Indigenous Futures (SIF) fund, publish a dozen scientific papers, deliver half a dozen conference presentations and initiate the preparation of a digital archive on the socio-cultural aspects of Nicobarese life before and in the aftermath. Some of the findings – summed up in the notion of complex disasters – were communicated outside the scientific community through mass media, a key outcome being a television documentary around Singh's work, now being expanded for the cinema.

Introduction

The 2009-2011 RAI fellowship in Urgent Anthropology was granted to Dr. Simron Jit Singh's project "Anthropological and ethnological research and documentation among the inhabitants of the Nicobar Islands". The Nicobar Islands (India) are home to some 30,000 indigenous inhabitants living from hunting, gathering, fishing, rearing pigs and chickens, and producing copra (desiccated coconuts) to exchange for rice, sugar, cloth and other consumables in the local market. In 2004, the islands were completely devastated by the Indian Ocean tsunami, taking with it thousands of human lives and destruction of the material culture. Singh had been researching the Nicobarese since 1999, and in response to the call for help by the local leaders in the aftermath, Singh stepped in to provide support in the rehabilitation efforts and in scientific documentation of the aid process and its effects on the Nicobarese society and culture.¹

The RAI fellowship for 2009 – 2011 granted to Singh was hosted by the School of Anthropology and Conservation, Kent University, U.K. The fellowship was requested with the following objectives of (a) provide further support in the rehabilitation process on the Nicobar Islands, (b) prepare a selection of scientific publications, and (c) work towards a digital archive on the life and culture for access by the Nicobarese community and other visitors at Port Blair (capital of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands). During this period of two years, the following activities and products were generated:

Task 1: Support in the rehabilitation process

Soon after the 2004 tsunami, a fund to support the self-rehabilitation efforts of the Nicobarese community was created with the help of three major donors in Austria - Caritas Austria, Universal Music Company, and the Alpen-Adria University. The fund named Sustainable Indigenous Futures (SIF) Fund is decided upon by a committee of 5 members – one representing each donor and two professors. The chair of the fund is Prof. Marina Fischer-Kowalski, Director of the Institute of Social Ecology, Alpen-Adria University. Singh acted as advisor to the fund and had the critical function to liaison with various stakeholders on the islands, undertake monitoring and evaluation, as well as prepare progress reports. Until 2009, the SIF fund handled projects directly with the indigenous councils and the Nicobar Youth Association (NYA), following which the steering committee of SIF decided to collaborate with the Tata Institute of Social Sciences (TISS), Mumbai, who have long standing credibility in development and disaster relief work, with an office in Port Blair, the capital of the Andaman & Nicobar Islands. This decision was taken to relieve Singh of the difficult and multiple roles in this process, and to engage a responsible organisation as a go-between that was itself based in India.

An agreement was signed with TISS in summer 2009, with the commitment that Singh would spend some months with the TISS team in Port Blair and train them to take over the rehabilitation projects. These projects related to the revival of livelihoods (through establishing a network of co-operative societies) and capacity building (through setting up of island knowledge centres – IKCs). From 15 October to 30 November 2009, Singh closely collaborated with the members of the Tata Institute of Social Sciences (TISS) in Mumbai and Port Blair, with the aim to train and guide the team who are engaged in these projects. This phase of engagement was, in large part, achieved with the support of the RAI fellowship. Thereafter, through 2010 and 2011, Singh acted as a consultant to the SIF/TISS collaboration and helped organise the two evaluation workshops in Port Blair.

The first (mid-term evaluation workshop) on the use of the SIF money towards agreed goals with TISS was held in Port Blair, 18-19 February 2010. The workshop reported on past activities, challenges and next steps (see Annex 1). The final workshop to evaluate the overall three year collaboration and impact of SIF/TISS efforts among the Nicobarese took place very recently, 26-27 November 2011 in Port Blair. The outcomes reported and discussed at the final workshop was extremely positive with most of the achievements in the last one year (see Annex 2). A final analysis and reflection document of the SIF/TISS collaboration is under preparation.

Task 2: Scientific publications

Since the beginning of 2010, Singh has been able to spend some time to write up several scientific publications based on the data collected over the past years. Having withdrawn to a great extent from the SIF process, the RAI fellowship also made it possible to allocate some time to writing. During the fellowship period a number of extended stays were undertaken at Kent University (U.K.) for discussions with colleagues (Dr. Raj Puri and Prof. Mike Fischer in particular) and searching for anthropological literature to support the scientific publications. Of the 12 publications planned in this period, 8 are either published or in press (see Annex 3 to 10 for prints/proofs). The remaining 4 publications, including a book (under contract from Springer) are still under preparation. The details of these publications are as follows:

Task 3: Digital Archive

Singh has carried out extensive field research among the inhabitants of Central Nicobars since 1999. In addition to material from his own field research, Singh has also searched historical archives and museums abroad for useful, documents and documentation on the Nicobarese culture and way of life. With the tsunami and its aftermath, such culture and Nicobarese way of life has seen certain degree of transformation. From time to time several from the Nicobarese community have expressed their wish to revive what can be revived, or at least set up a documentation centre that shows their way of life. Over the years, to this end, Singh has proposed, within the framework of the RAI fellowship, to build up a digital archive of documents, and audio-visual material and make it available to the A & N Administration (Archives Department) and the community (via the Island Knowledge Centres), and elsewhere under different terms and conditions. The main target group users of this archive will be the community, tourists, students and researchers.

However, it has to be admitted that the work towards such an archive and digitalising all the material was clearly underestimated including the market cost of technology and assistance. The complexity and variety of archiving technologies, the different categories of materials to be digitalized, a user-friendly interface and looking into the future did not make it at all easy to arrive at decisions. A professional support would have been impossible given the limited resources from the fellowship. Hence, most of the work had to be done by Singh himself.

However, as Singh had no experience in this area, a lot of time was consumed in learning about appropriate technologies, format and archiving processes. Progress towards this objective is as follows:

1. With the guidance of Prof. Mike Fischer at Kent University, a concept has been drawn up for the archive, and software has been agreed. Technical details such as resolution of images and documents, file format, structuring of data, etc. has been discussed and agreed.
2. Similar issues were discussed with Prof. Heinrich Berg (Head of Archive, Vienna City Archives), namely file format, structure and digitalizing equipment
3. Discussions with Dr. Heide Leigh-Theisen (former curator of insular SE Asian collections, Museum of Ethnology Vienna) took place and sought her support in building this archive by way of advice as well as assist in finding a suitable technical solution in the scanning of images and documents in Vienna. Dr. Leigh-Theisen has been a close collaborator on Singh's research on the material culture of the Nicobarese for many years.
4. Discussions have concluded with the relevant departments of the Andaman and Nicobar Administration for housing the archive in Port Blair and on the Nicobar Islands. The terms and conditions will be drawn up once the archive is finished by 2013.
5. Scanning/digitalizing of part of the material was achieved: About 1,000 images, 500 documents (obtained from historical archives), and nearly half of the field notes and interviews were transcribed. These are all in raw format and the digitization will continue in the next months with some assistance. Additional source of funding is being sought to pull together the digitalized material into a database with a user-friendly interface. The RAI fellowship will be acknowledged once the archive is completed, and if mutually agreed, a copy of the archive may be handed to the RAI following certain terms and conditions.

Additional activities: Conference presentations, media and public Relations

During the fellowship period, a number of conference presentations were made on the Nicobar Islands in the aftermath of the tsunami and the consequences of humanitarian aid on the indigenous society, summed under the notion of "complex disasters". These are:

Singh, S.J. (2011). "Reinforcing vulnerability. The crisis of aid and sustainability". Keynote at the conference: Footprints in the Forest. Does Forestry Assistance Matter? 30 May 2011. University of Helsinki, Finland.

Singh, S.J. (2011). "Human Security and Sustainability on Island Systems". Presentation at the IHDP – International Conference on Industrial Transformation, Urbanization and Human Security in the Asia-Pacific. 14-18 January 2011. Taipei, Taiwan.

Singh, S.J., Fischer-Kowalski, M., Haas, Wildenberg, M. (2011). "Metabolic Transition on a Small Island". Presentation at the workshop on Island Industrial Ecology and Sustainability. 5-8 January 2011 Hawaii, U.S.A.

Singh, S.J. (2010). Urgent Anthropology in Times of Crisis: A Scientist's Dilemma in the Aftermath of the Tsunami. Presentation at the workshop "New Directions for Urgent Anthropology Research", September 24-26, 2010, University of Kent, Canterbury.

Singh, S.J. (2010). Humanitarian Aid and Ecological Sustainability. A case in the aftermath of the tsunami. Presentation at the conference of the International Geographical Union (IGU) – Commission for Islands, 27-30 August, 2010, Ven, Sweden.

Singh, S.J. (2010). "Negotiating Diversity: Interactions between Nature and Culture". Keynote at the European Forum on Music, Musical Diversity: Looking back – Looking forward, 15-18 April 2010, Vienna, Austria.

Besides conference presentations, the film and print media were also addressed. The most important outcome was the making of a television documentary Aftermath – The second flood directed by Raphael Barth of Golden Girls Filmproduktion in co-production with the Austrian television, and with Irish and German production companies. It is funded by the Austrian television, the Vienna Film Fund, Irish Film Board and Hamburg Film Fund. Among the institutions involved in realising this film are the Sustainable Indigenous Futures (SIF) Fund, the Tata Institute of Social Sciences (TISS) Mumbai, the Alpen-Adria University Klagenfurt, and the Museum of Ethnology in Vienna. The 52 minutes television documentary was partly shot at the RAI premises – interviewing Dr. Hillary Callan in a dialogue with Singh on the RAI fellowship – and later at Kent University (see Annex 11). The television documentary is currently being expanded and edited for a 90 minutes cinema version, and also for screening at film festivals. The television version of the documentary can be obtained by writing to the director, Raphael Barth: raphael@goldengirls.at

Tracing Trails with Gwich'in: Poetics, Land, Well-Being, and Memory in Circumpolar Canada

FINAL REPORT

Dr Jan Peter Laurens Loovers

RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship

London, August 2012

In mid-February 2011, I returned to the wintery days of the circumpolar North. Sitting in the kitchen of Shitsuu – ‘my grandmother’ in the Gwich’in language – I was catching up news when an elderly man came to visit. In the seemingly indirect yet direct way of making plans, he spoke about going to his cabin down the Peel River. I knew he was inviting me and I mentioned that I could join him. We continued drinking tea, eating some traditional food, and catching up with more news. My nine month fieldwork period as the Royal Anthropological Institute’s Urgent Anthropology Fellow had officially commenced. Accompanying the man a week later, I found myself back out on the land after three and half year’s absence. In the months to follow I would work extensively and intensively on the subjects of language dynamics, resource extraction developments, well-being and food, and memory. The period had allowed me to further my understandings in the complexities of life in the circumpolar North and to further my theoretical, anthropological horizon. In this final report I will discuss the objectives, challenges, and outcomes of my RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship.

Acknowledgements

There are a large number of people and institutions who I want to acknowledge for their various means of support throughout my academic career. I am particularly grateful for the RAI’s Urgent Anthropology funders and committee to have approved my project and to have allowed me to further my work both in anthropology and the circumpolar North. I acknowledge Dr David Shankland, Christine Patel, Amanda Vinson, and Susanne Hammacher at the Royal Anthropological Institute. They have assisted me in various ways throughout the fellowship. I have had the great fortune to visit Prof George Appell at his home in Phillips (USA), and our discussion, his guidance, and support have been wonderful and inspiring. I want to thank the Department of Anthropology at Goldsmiths University of London for providing me a work place and for their collegiality. More specifically Prof Steven Nugent, Dr Ricardo Leizaolo, Dr Mark Lamont, and the secretaries. I also want to acknowledge Prof Tim Ingold, Prof David Anderson (University of Aberdeen, UK) and Dr Fabiola Jara Gomez (Utrecht University, NL) for shaping me academically. I have been working with the Gwich'in Social and Cultural Institute for many years and the Institute has been more than helpful and supportive in my research. I especially want to thank Sharon Snowshoe, Ingrid Kritsch, Alestine Andre, and William George Firth. The community of Fort McPherson has become a second home, and the Gwich'in in Fort McPherson and across the circumpolar North have been teaching, sharing with, and supporting me throughout my fieldwork. I feel a great privilege to work with them and continue to learn from them. In this specific project the following persons and institutions have been particularly important: the Snowshoe family, Robert and Dorothy Alexie, Mr and Mrs Colin, Joanne Snowshoe, Mary Teya, Charlie and Mary Effie Snowshoe, Bertha Francis, James Ross, Woodie Elias, Abraham Stewart Junior, Thomas and Eileen Koe, Eunice and Eleanor Mitchell, Gladys Alexie, John Ritter, the Teet'l'it Gwich'in Tribal Council, the Aurora Institute, the Gwich'in Tribal Council, the Yukon Research Council, the Trondëk Hwëch'in First Nations, the Nacho Nyak Dun First Nations, the Vuntut Gwitchin First Nations, the YNLC, CPAWS, and YCS. Finally I want to thank Linda Tonolli and the Lamonts. My work could not have been able without the support of my family in the Netherlands.

Introduction

The Peel River Watershed - a vast area of rivers, mountains, and forests in the Yukon Territories, northern Canada - has been an important part of the traditional land of the Teet'l'it Gwich'in (transcribed as 'dwellers of the Peel River Headwaters'). During winter, small nomadic kin-groups of Teet'l'it Gwich'in would move around, or stay in one of the semi-permanent encampments, and hunt for meat or trap for fur. In the summer, the Teet'l'it Gwich'in would gather along the Peel River in large fishing villages. A number of historical events (e.g., high fur prizes, settlement policies of the Canadian Government, land claim negotiations, and the signing of the Gwich'in Comprehensive Land Claim Agreement), has led to a more permanent settlement of Teet'l'it Gwich'in down the Peel River in the community of Fort McPherson. The Teet'l'it Gwich'in, however, have continued to articulate how their lives remain intimately woven with the Peel River and the Peel River Watershed.¹ Documenting and investigating these articulations has become increasingly urgent in the recent debates of development initiatives, both industrial and environmental, in the Peel River Watershed. Building on my postgraduate work, which included fifteen months of intense fieldwork, I have further expanded on the 'field of manifold relations' (Ingold 2000; see also Appell 2005, for a 'cultural ecosystem' which corresponds to a certain extent with this field). In the project I have brought together poetics (e.g., song and language), well-being (e.g., traditional medical practices and contemporary health), memory (e.g., histories and stories), and land (e.g., land use patterns, land use rights, trails, and camps). To restate, the main objective of the research has been:

to (re)trace Teet'l'it Gwich'in articulations in life, and to investigate the link between poetics, well-being, memory, and land in circumpolar Canada.

I have argued that this needs to be examined and situated in the 'field of manifold relations'. As argued in my postgraduate work, this field is ongoing, sentient, and historical. Like during the postgraduate fieldwork, during the RAI Urgent Anthropology fellowship the Teet'l'it Gwich'in have emphasised the importance of their land and language on many occasions. They have articulated this in terms of their well-being and urge for self-governance. The Peel River has remained an integral part in all these discussions. During the nine months of RAI Urgent Anthropology research, I have investigated in more detail these articulations and have furthered my knowledge about language dynamics and the land. The research was led by the four research goals:

¹ Teet'l'it Gwich'in have unanimously opposed any form of mining in the Peel River Watershed. They have been critical towards the current land claims which were established without a land use management plan and without the consent of the communities. During the political meeting in Fort McPherson, the Teet'l'it Gwich'in clearly articulated the relation between the land and their well-being. They fear that any mining or development will be destructive to their lives (see CBC News <http://www.cbc.ca/canada/north/story/2010/09/24/north-peel-watershed-ft-mcpherson.html#socialcomments>)

1. to map and document Teetł'it Gwich'in articulations in Fort McPherson and along the Peel River and Peel River Watershed.
2. to preserve and address the articulation to strengthen language revitalisation schemes and self-governance.
3. to outline traditional land rights and land use patterns whilst critically asserting the Peel River Watershed development plans.
4. to contribute to anthropological and ethnographic literature by bridging ontology (being) and epistemology (knowing).

An important aim of the research has been to record and preserve the articulations, and to counteract the current rapid decline of the Gwich'in language and some other traditions (respectively, songs, stories, and travelling up the Peel River). This research did not intend to make a linguistic analysis of the syntax, phonetics, or grammar of the poetics (songs and linguistic diversity). I have lacked the skills and time to take such an endeavour and, moreover, I wished to focus on a vernacular visual documentation (filming and audio-recording) of the field of manifold relations. I conclude that such a focus on articulations can ultimately lead to: i) preserving poetic articulations, ii) a renewed interest of Teetł'it Gwich'in youth in the rapidly declining language and songs and travelling on the land, iii) a more profound understanding of the integrate relations between poetics, the land, memory, and well-being, iv) a pivotal contribution to the current debates around the Peel River Watershed development initiatives and Teetł'it Gwich'in self-governance, and v) a different perspective on language revitalisation projects and potential complete loss of the traditional way of life.

Objectives and Challenges

Allow me to discuss the four goals of the research proposal and turn to the main objective.

1. Map and Document Teetł'it Gwich'in Articulations

It was on a February early Saturday afternoon whilst visiting Mrs Colin at her home, when I became more attentive to the language dynamics amongst Gwich'in Elders. She recounted a story about herself and her father-in-law. He was telling her a story at a traditional fishing village whilst she was young. Seeing her confused expression, he asked if she had understood him. As she answered negatively, he explained that he had been talking straight Gwich'in. This "straight Gwich'in", I came to realise, is an archaic form which the Gwich'in used to speak. The "straight Gwich'in" corresponds for a great part with the written language in the Tukudh Bible. The Bible was translated in the Gwich'in language in the 1800s by a Metis Anglican Minister and Gwich'in women. This Tukudh Bible has remained an integral part in the lives of Gwich'in, and can be an important means for language revitalisation. I have started an initial analysis of the different versions of the Tukudh Bible translations². The different versions are interesting as they illustrate a variety of words which are indexed by Gwich'in as "Tsii Deii words" (another vernacular term for "straight Gwich'in") and are challenging to translate. There are still a few Elders who speak the archaic language and read the Tukudh Bible. These are predominantly Elders who have not attended the notorious residential schools. One of them is Joanne Snowshoe and I have worked with her during the research. At a weekend meeting at Nitaiinlaii fishing village, I have documented – film and audio-recording – several Elders telling stories in the Gwich'in language and discussing the Tukudh Bible. I further have attended the annual Yukon Native Language Centre Gwich'in Literacy course, and have recorded Gwich'in Elders singing hymns in Gwich'in. During several interviews I have returned to the "Tsii Deii language", and Teet'it Gwich'in Elder Mary Teya has been the most articulate in the relation between language and land. At a lengthy interview at her house she stated 'I lived on the land, I lived the language'. She further provided several examples of the Tsii Deii words. Copies of the interviews will be placed at the Gwich'in Social and Cultural Institute, at the participants, and possibly the RAI.

Besides the language, I have also focused on traditional songs. Unlike the Tsii Deii language, the Tsii Deii ilig have been much more covert and the research on this topic has been strenuous. I have come across several older versions of songs and have discussed them with Elders. I have further shared and discussed with Teet'it Gwich'in a lesser known Smithsonian Institute CD containing Alaskan Gwich'in songs. With the help of anthropologist Thea Luig, I have put music to songs recorded by a Catholic priest in the late 1800s. The Jesuit priest Emilé Petitot made musical notes of medicine songs, mourning songs, and other traditional songs. The music illustrates a clear ethnopoetic repertoire which needs further analysis. Although the Elders have been aware of some songs, it has proven difficult to record these Tsii Deii songs. Instead Gwich'in hymns have been put to the front, and arguably have replaced the traditional songs. Joanne Snowshoe, for example, has explained that one hymn is being sung when someone is very sick, dying, or to cure dog's wickedness. Due to a number of circumstances – deaths in the community, the decrease of health of several Elders, and the water conditions – I have been travelling up Peel River much less than anticipated. I initiated a five-day travel up Peel River to the Mouth of Snake River and further up to the Peel Canyon. The travel company existed of five boats with Gwich'in youth and middle-aged Gwich'in. Unfortunately for a greater part of the trip there were no Elders involved, Teet'l'it Gwich'in Elder Robert Alexie Senior arrived on the third evening of the trip. During the trip we discussed the Peel River Watershed development initiatives, place names, and the movements of Gwich'in ancestors. Besides this we fished for grayling, hunted moose, and the youth learnt from the middle-aged Gwich'in to read the water and be out on the land. The trip has been successful and those who participated have showed a renewed interest in their traditional land.

2. Preserve Articulations and Self Governance

As mentioned above I share the recording with the community, the concerned institutions, and the RAI. Compared to several years ago during my PhD research, I have noticed a renewed interest in the Gwich'in language by younger Gwich'in. It was thus during a local Carnival talent show that a Gwich'in boy was singing 'Jesus Loves Me' in Gwich'in. Other Gwich'in youth have also practising their Gwich'in with me. The answer of this language shift needs to be found in the Gwich'in classes which have become more structured and consistent. Although these improvements are worthwhile, I do argue that there need to be more language projects related with activities out on the land. Emphasising and learning language out on the land seems to be one of the most effective ways of teaching. As George Appell has argued with his 'cultural dictionary', the contextualisation of the language is crucial. This is why I have had great difficulty to record previous traditional songs which I had heard many years ago. In the community these songs, and language alike, are placed outside their context. Further research needs to be conducted on the land for an extended period to preserve the poetic articulations.

3. Land Rights, Land Use Patterns, and Peel River Watershed

Land rights are particularly contentious in the Peel River Watershed. The area is situated in the Yukon Territory and outside the Gwich'in Settlement Area. Although the Teet'it Gwich'in have primary land use rights in the Watershed, they have not the same legal rights and power as in the Northwest Territories. This has become particularly pertinent in the last decade with an explosive increase of mining claims in the Watershed without Gwich'in knowledge of approval of these claims in their traditional land.

During this project I have investigated the Peel River Watershed development initiatives in great detail. I have analysed the different mining claims, the mining companies, the relation between mining companies, investment banks, and multinationals, and the history of mining. I have attended the Geoscience Forum Meeting in Whitehorse, and recorded a number of presentations. I have shared this information with Gwich'in and have left copies at the Gwich'in Tribal Council.

4. Epistemology and Ontology and Tracing Trails

The RAI project has further strengthened the argument that epistemology and ontology are intimately woven together and need to be discussed as such. Returning to Mary Teya's words 'I lived on the land, I lived my language', she emphasises how poetics (language and song) and the land are connected, and how the land has been essential in her well-being and that of the Gwich'in people. Well-being is often discussed in the same breath as food, and indeed Gwich'in Elder Mrs Colin stressed that I should incorporate food and cooking in my work on Tsii Deii language, the land, well-being, and memory. Spending time with Elders out on the land and in the community, they often refer to the ways how they, and their parents and grandparents, used to live out on the land. The Elders would remember how the Old People would cook and prepare food in ways which have now become near to obsolete. I have documented a number of these stories and shared them with other Elders. There have been interests to organise a local workshop for 'traditional cooking and preparing of food'.

Conclusion

My RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship research has illustrated that there is an intimate relation between land, poetics, well-being, and memory. Through the research, I have shown that 'language loss' is much more dynamic and nuances need to be made. The 'language loss' division between first (Elders), second (middle-aged), and third (youth) generation are much more complex, and Gwich'in Elders have stated how there is a crucial variation amongst themselves. As mentioned above, there are a few Elders who continue to speak an archaic Gwich'in. Language revitalisation projects, I argue, need to include such complex dynamics. The programs for language revitalisation can be threefold: on the land, in the community with Tukudh Bible classes, and in the community at school and in the homes. Taking ownership of the language, like Gwich'in language workers emphasis, will play an integral role in this. With Gwich'in Elders passing away, the work on the Tsii Deii language remains pivotal. Recording Elders singing Gwich'in hymns and reading the Tukudh Bible needs to be continued. Gwich'in continue to live life out on the land – hunting, fishing, trapping, picking berries, travelling. Across the generations, most Gwich'in know and use Gwich'in words for animals, berries, wood. The RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship has enabled me to further my work with the Teet'l'it Gwich'in and show such a continuation amidst all the challenges.

Outcomes

Up to date there have been a few publications that have flowed, or will flow, out of this Fellowship. I will discuss them briefly.

A. Publications

Wishart, Robert P. and Jan Peter L. Loovers

(In press) Building Log Cabins in Teet'l'it Gwich'in Country: Vernacular Architecture and Articulations of Presence, in About the Hearth: Perspectives on Home, Hearth, Household in the Circumpolar North. David G. Anderson, Robert G. Wishart, and Virginie Vaté (eds.). Berghahn: London

This publication is primarily based on doctoral research and argues for an understanding of log cabins as relational, constellations of political and social engagement with the land and others, and reminders of cultural fluorescence. Although the publication is not directly based on the RAI Urgent Anthropology Fellowship research, I have included the Fellowship in the acknowledgement and notes of contributors for some additions to the book chapter.

Loovers, Jan Peter L., Ingrid Kritsch, and Alestine Andre,
(In process) Partnerships and Sharing in the circumpolar North: Crafting Anthropology with Gwich'in, in Granular Publics: Theory, Method and Ethics of Changing Constituencies in Anthropology. Caroline Gatt and George Marcus (eds.), TBC

This proposed publication is very much at an early stage and a publisher still needs to be confirmed. The accepted book chapter will argue for 'recounting stories' as an integral part of partnership between anthropologists, local research councils, and the fieldwork communities. The notion of partnership, and sharing, allows a relational alignment between vernacular theoretical anthropological discussions and pedagogical "field" approaches.

Loovers, Jan Peter L.
(in process) Between the Enemy Lines: Resource Extraction Initiatives in the circumpolar Canadian North, in RAI Conference Proceedings. TBC

This publication is expected to become confirmed around October 2012. The proposed publication is a result of the RAI Conference 'Anthropology in the World'. See conferences for further discussion.

Loovers, Jan Peter L.
2012. Review of Diamond Road. Anthropology Review Database May 17, 2012.
<http://wings.buffalo.edu/ARD/cgi/showme.cgi?keycode=3567>, accessed July 20, 2012.

This publication has been published at the Anthropology Review Database and reviews the Diamond Road Motion Picture.

B. Conferences and Seminars

Loovers, Jan Peter L.
2012 Between the Enemy Lines: Resource Extraction Initiatives in the circumpolar Canadian North, in Panel 16: Applying anthropology in the extractive industries: making the discipline work for indigenous communities affected by multinational resource extraction. RAI Anthropology in the World Conference, 8th June, 2012 – 10th June, 2012, London

The conference paper discussed the current resource extraction and land use planning processes in the Peel River Watershed, and examines different histories of reading the land. The readings by mining companies and environmental organisations predominantly silence, dismiss, or ignore those of indigenous peoples. Anthropology, I concluded, can offer an alternative by addressing these different readings and including them in policies.

Loovers, Jan Peter L.

2012 Tracing Trails with Gwich'in: Poetics, Land, Memory, and Well-Being, RAI Seminar, 24th June, 2012, London

The seminar paper specifically elaborated on the ethnographic fieldwork findings. The themes of poetics, land, memory, and well-being were placed in the background of the resource extraction initiatives in the Peel River Watershed.

C. Film

Loovers, Jan Peter L.

2012 Window to Values. Colour, 1hr, 16:9, HD recording. Goldsmiths University, GSCI, RAI

The film (in progress) discusses the development initiatives in the Peel River Watershed, local stories about a fraud Gold Rush in the Peel River Watershed, and the continuation of life out on the land. The film will be played, and placed, in the school at Fort McPherson and the broader community. The film will further seek a broader audience.

NOTE: I have also been working on another film which will be primarily published for local use and deals with the travelling of Gwich'in Elders on the land.

D. Website

Canadian Museum of Civilisation and the Gwich'in Social and Cultural Institute

www.civilization.ca/gwichin

I have assisted in the recording of stories, recording of place names, and other work (see the credits for specifics). The website showcases a number of Gwich'in artefacts and oral history.

International Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (IUAES)

c/o John Gledhill
Social Anthropology, School of Social Sciences
The University of Manchester
Arthur Lewis Building
Oxford Road
Manchester M13 9PL
United Kingdom

On February 19, 2010 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a conference grant in the amount of $15,000 to the IUAES. On June 9, 2011 the Foundation awarded a second conference grant in the amount of $45,000 to the IUAES. Both grants are to support the "17th Congress of the International Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences: Evolving Humanity, Emerging Worlds" to take place in 2013 in Manchester, United Kingdom.

The IUAES is a world organization of scientists and institutions working in the fields of anthropology and ethnology, but also of interest to archaeologists and linguists, among others. Its aim is to enhance exchange and communication among scholars of all regions of the world, in a collective effort to expand human knowledge. In this way it hopes to contribute to a better understanding of human society, and to a sustainable future based on harmony between nature and culture.

Through its major Congress, held every five years, the IUAES provides a world forum for the discussion and dissemination of research. In the period between world congresses, it also sponsors Inter-Congresses, seminars and symposia, and encourages the participation of anthropologists in other international meetings and projects. Through its Scientific Commissions, the IUAES stimulates the convergence of research interests among anthropologists, and the dissemination of research findings through publications.

The 17th Congress of the IUAES will be held August 5-10, 2013. The grant funds will be disbursed to the IUAES in 2012 and the final report and financial accounting are due within three months of the Congress.

World Council of Anthropological Associations (WCAA)

c/o Thomas Reuter
76 Stony Creek Road
Warrandyte VIC 3113
Australia

On February 22, 2011 the Wenner-Gren Foundation awarded a grant in the amount of $75,000 to the World Council of Anthropological Associations. The grant provides general operating support for the development of the World Council of Anthropological Associations as expenses relating to the biennial meetings.

The World Council of Anthropological Associations is a network of national and international associations that aims to promote worldwide communication and cooperation in anthropology.

Its primary objectives are:

- to promote the discipline of anthropology in an international context
- to promote cooperation and the sharing of information among world anthropologists
- to promote jointly organized events of scientific debate, and
- co-operation in research activities and dissemination of anthropological knowledge.

The grant covers five years funding through March 2016. The first annual installment of $15,000 was paid on March 1, 2011. The annual progress report and financial accounting for the 2011 installment are attached.

WCAA 2011 Annual Progress Report

WCAA activities in 2011 include.

Outreach

The main project is the establishment of an organization under the WCAA umbrella called “Anthropologists without Borders (ASF),” with possible Ford Foundation (Brazil) funding. Virginia commissioned Lauren Anaya, an attorney/prosecutor now pursuing a PH.D. degree in legal anthropology, to collate information on the legal requirements for such an organization in different countries, as well as three different size/complexity options for the proposed organization. Brazil seems to be the most favourable option, if we can get funding. Other activities include:

- Letter sent to Austrian Federal Minister of Education about the proposed closure of the IFK
- Letter sent to protest the EU’s decision to downgrade funding for social science research
- Letter sent to World Intellectual Property Organization about implications of IP rules for research
- Skype meeting of the OC on 14 March 2011
- Establishment of an online voting platform
- Publication of papers from our meeting in Kunming (Gustavo Lins Ribeiro, ed., 2011, Global Anthropologies, Beijing: Intellectual Property Publishers).

Website

The Wenner-Gren Foundation provided us with a US $ 8200 grant for the upgrading of our website. This work has been carried out by NomadIT over the last 18 month under the direction of the chair and still continues. The progress has been slow because we needed to develop content for the website, not just a structure. One of the main content items to date is the publications section, which was developed by Gordon Matthews. Another is the blog and discussion forum we have established recently, again with Gordon’s help. The blog and forum will need to be heavily publicised among our members to make it work.

Ethics

Member association’s ethics codes have been collected for comparison, with the support of Wenner-Gren staff. Not all associations have a code of ethics. We will consider at our next biannual meeting in March 2012 whether WCAA members can agree on some basic common ethical principles.

Publications

We have developed an online list of anthropological journals available on the internet, with free content. The list is a powerful resource, especially for people in developing countries with inadequate IT-based or conventional library services. Thank you to Gordon, for organizing a team of his students to do the research that produced this extensive list. Plans for a journal for the republication of top quality Non-English Language articles (Deja-Lu) are still being explored. RAI has agreed to look for a publisher to manage the journal.

New members

WCAA has admitted several new members since we last met in New Orleans in November 2010, about seven months ago. These new members are:

- Association Française d'Ethnologie et d'Anthropologie - AFEA.
- Anthropological Association of the Philippines / Ugnayang Pang-Aghamtao, Inc - UGAT.
- Taiwan Society for Anthropology and Ethnology - TSAE.
- Tunisian Association of Anthropology / L'Association Tunisienne d'Anthropologie - TAA.

Several other applications are pending.

Academic

A roundtable was held at the AAA meeting in Montreal

Three panels were sponsored by WCAA at the Perth IUAES/AAS.ASANZ joint conference

Wenner-Gren funded

The main use of funds will be for the biennial meeting next years. We are now receiving funding applications from delegates. With now 39 delegates plus 8 organizing committee members, expenses can only be met if funding is pooled over a two-year period.

Meanwhile, funding for Deputy Chair Michal Buch was essential for Michal to fulfil his role at the Perth interim meeting. Generally, the funding is very important because it allows us to support fair and equal participation of participants from disadvantaged countries and associations. To maintain this kind of forum, for the purpose of international cooperation and exchange, is the primary aim and objective of WCAA.
