In order to create a public movement and rallying cry to fix the international adoption system that will generate an impetus for world-wide change, Both Ends Burning is launching an integrated multi-media campaign. The stories of the children and families enmeshed in international adoption are incredibly compelling and are at the heart of Both Ends Burning's campaign. These stories and the message of fixing the system will be told through print, including newspaper, magazine articles and a book; moving images, including television appearances and a movie; the internet, including a website and links to and content production for other sites; social networking, such as Facebook and Twitter; and news dissemination of events in the world of adoption via the Both Ends Burning website and email newsletter. Both Ends Burning strives to create awareness, promote adoption as an option, and make every child's right to a family an important, relevant, social issue. Both Ends Burning promotes adoption as a solution for children without parents and works to create a culture of adoption and to help facilitate changes in the current system. Growing up in a family is a child's most basic human right. Today that basic human right is denied, in many cases, simply due to a dysfunctional adoption system. Both Ends Burning works to protect and advocate for the rights of orphaned children in an effort to minimize the devastating effects of institutionalization, while stressing the importance of protecting birth parents and ensuring that proper safeguards are in place for the children.
