Statement of Facts and Circumstances Supporting the Ronald Coase Institute's Status as a Publicly Supported Charity, 2012

Activities to accomplish exempt purposes

The workshops, conferences, and network of the Ronald Coase Institute help post-doctoral social scientists and other young scholars, mostly from developing and transitional economies, to study important economic problems in their countries and seek practical solutions to increase people's opportunities to improve their lives. Through the workshops prominent scholars build the capacity of young researchers to use institutional economics to formulate significant research questions, design and implement empirical research, communicate their results persuasively to policy makers and the public, and disseminate their findings widely. Workshop graduates join a collaborative network of outstanding scholars that continues to support their research through mentoring and advice. One or more workshops, each with about 26 participants from all over the world, are held annually. Participants are selected on the basis of their current research abstracts and their potential as research and opinion leaders. Research conferences, seminars, and meetings are organized to discuss methodologies, analyze important institutional issues, and disseminate and critique research findings. Scholarly papers and information on institutional economics, the work of Ronald Coase, and the participants and activities of the Institute are freely provided on the Institute's website.

1. Percentage of financial support from the public

The average financial support received by the Ronald Coase Institute from the public (Schedule A, Part II, Section C line 14) for the period 2008-2012 was 38.06.

2. Sources of support

The Ronald Coase Institute receives financial support from public/governmental sources as well as individuals and private foundations with an interest in educating economists to study and overcome institutional problems in their own countries. Universities and other publicly supported educational organizations cooperate in the Institute's activities, providing in-kind support in the form of meeting facilities, meals, accommodations, and the like, and providing funds for the Institute to bring its alumni as visiting faculty and scholars. A large number of prominent scholars and experts volunteer their services as described under 4 below. In addition the Institute receives expert legal advice pro bono.

3. Governing body

All the members of the Ronald Coase Institute's board of directors have specialized knowledge of its field of activities, specifically, new institutional economics. Two of the directors are Nobel Prize winners in economics. Three of the six are currently professors of economics or political science and three are emeritus professors of economics at leading US and European universities. All six directors are well-known experts and widely published authors in the field of new institutional economics.

4. Pubic services

As of May 30, 2012 the Institute had held 19 workshops around the world benefiting a total of 418 participants from 65 different countries. Participants are mostly young professors in economics and related disciplines who are engaged in scholarly research in their own countries as well as graduate students in economics and other disciplines. An open invitation to apply to each workshop is posted publicly on the Institute's Web site and is also widely distributed through scholarly networks around the world. All qualified individuals are invited to apply. Participants are selected competitively by the Institute's scientific committee based on their research projects and CVs. Selections are made without consideration of race, religion, or gender. Scholarships covering workshop tuition and, usually, the costs of meals and accommodations are available for participants who need financial support to attend the workshop. Almost all participants from developing and transitional countries, who comprise 87% of all past participants, have received scholarships on the basis of need. Support for transportation and similar expenses is also available for hardship cases.

The Institute has organized research conferences and meetings for select alumni of its workshops. It also maintains a network of alumni and supports them through mentoring and advice, regular postings about their activities on its Web site, and invitations to scholarly conferences organized by the Institute or other scholarly organizations (such as the International Society of New Institutional Economics) to showcase their research, and social events. Exceptional alumni are also supported through small research grants and sponsorship as visiting fellows at the University of Chicago, George Mason University and Washington University in St. Louis.

A total of 97 individuals (including 19 alumni of earlier workshops) have contributed their time and services to work as core faculty and lecturers for the Ronald Coase Institute workshops without compensation. These individuals are prominent professors or expert practitioners in the fields of economics, law, political science, and related disciplines. Most are widely published and recognized authorities in the field of new institutional economics. Four are Nobel Laureates in economics. The Institute's workshops have an established curriculum and methodology.

The Ronald Coase Institute posts information about its workshops on its Web site, including announcements of competitions for its upcoming workshops, complete workshop programs, lists of the participants and faculty, and the participants' research abstracts. The Institute also publishes working papers based on research conducted by its officers, alumni, faculty, and fellows that are freely available to members of the public. Its Web site provides information on Ronald Coase (a Nobel Prize winner and a founder of the field of new institutional economics), including a complete list of his publications, and the site assists members of the public to find access to out-of-print publications by Ronald Coase. The Web site also makes a glossary, and reading lists on new institutional economics available to the public. The Institute also maintains a Facebook page with links to our events and information useful to our network and students of institutional economics, such as job openings.
