Icarus Interstellar is a volunteer scientific research organization dedicated to studying technical problems relating to deep space and interstellar exploration. The program is international and is staffed by volunteers who contribute their time and resources freely to the fulfillment of the organization's goals. The work performed by the organization described in Lines 28-30 were not paid for under grants but contributed to the organization freely. Icarus is actively pursuing government solicitations from NASA and the NSF to improve the quality of our programs and transition aspects of our research from studies to laboratory experiments, organize workshops and conferences and ultimately provide support (educational and otherwise) for underprivileged students and individuals interested in deep space and interstellar exploration.
