The Boethos Foundation owns a large collection of very low production oil and gas properties (1099). The original form of ownership was a working interest. This included both revenues and expenses. In 2011 Boethos converted the working interest into a passive royalty interest over-ride. This produced a partial year of revenue and expenses. This also changed the cash flows of the foundation. The prolonged economic recession resulted in weak oil and gas revenues along with continued high maintenance expenses. The conversion should result in less drain of foundation assets and an opportunity to participate in increased income should oil prices rise to 2008 levels.
