		Client Note 1 - UBIT REPORTING In May 2009, a federal court jury in Wisconsin ruled in the Community First Credit Union case that credit life and disability insurance and GAP insurance coverage made available to member-borrowers by Community First Credit Union of Appleton, Wisconsin were "substantially related" to Community First's tax exempt purpose The court granted a tax refund to Community First based on the jury's verdict, confirming that credit insurance and GAP were not subject to the unrelated business income tax (UBIT) The IRS did not appeal the case In November 2009, in the Belco Credit Union case, the U S District Court in Colorado ruled that commissions received by Belco Credit Union of Greenwood Village, Colorado from the sale of financial products to Belco members, were not subject to UBIT The court ruled that the sale of those financial products to Belco members was "substantially related" to Belco's tax-exempt purpose of promoting thrift among its members, and the resulting income was exempt from UBIT In April 2010, the court in Colorado issued its second and final decision in the Belco Credit Union case, holding that (i) credit life and disability insurance was "substantially related" to Belco's tax-exempt purpose of promoting thrift among its members, and (ii) Belco income from AD&D insurance sold to members by an independent marketing company, where Belco was essentially limited to allowing use of its name and brand, providing member contact information, and reviewing and approving (but not creating) the marketing materials, represented passive "royalty" income exempt from UBIT On October 19, 2010 the U S Department of Justice abandoned its plan to appeal the federal judge's favorable credit union rulings in the Belco case The decisions in these court cases are now definitive statements of the law, are not subject to further review, and provide "substantial authority" that income from the sale of credit life and disability insurance, GAP coverage, financial products sold to credit union members, and AD&D insurance sold via direct mail is exempt from UBIT As such, for 2011, Credit Union of Denver is not reporting these income sources as subject to UBIT, but is filing a 2011 Form 990-T to report income from mechanical breakdown insurance
