Grantmaker's Description of How Grants are Used		CDA monitors the use of grant funds by following set procedures outlined in our Fiscal Procedures Manual. This manual describes the implementation of CDA's procedures in a single comprehensive set of fiscal operating instructions. The most important aspect of the bookkeeping and accounting procedures is that they provide internal controls and checks and balances on the expenditure of funds. To maintain the integrity and accountability of all funds received and expenses incurred, internal control measures, verified by annual Organizational Wide Audits, are in place to detect and prevent any improper financial activities. Our contracts require intense monitoring of expenses and earnings due to fluctuating caseloads and therefore variable administrative reimbursement. We have a budget committee that meets several times each month to assess current and projected expenses relative to available or projected income. All expenses receive prior approval and are then reviewed by two different people within the Accounting department. A third person reviews each expense for proper classification and fiscal reporting. We have seven authorized check signers and each check requires two signatures. When possible, all checks must be first signed by either of the two Directors.
