Procedures for monitoring the use of grant funds outside of the US: As Givology was founded on the principle of transparency, we require that each of our grassroots partners adhere to the strictest form of reporting and accountability. The main methods that we monitor entail:

Quarterly progress reports in the form of letters from students, photos, video clips, student transcripts, receipts of tuition payment & other educational expenses, description of activities by the program manager or school administrator, among other updates. We maintain regular contact with our grantees to ensure that operations are proceeding as anticipated, and cross check information with multiple sources to verify.

Visit by our fellows and affiliated members: Through our partnerships with universities and other foundations, we leverage our volunteer network for site visits. Each year, we have teams visiting approximately 5-7 of our grantees on a rotating basis to provide consulting work, conduct due diligence, and assess the progress of our grants.

If a grantee receiving our funds does not meet our standards for accountability or fail to deliver comprehensive quarterly reports, we suspend the partnership and the disbursement of funds.

Providing the Form 990 to all members of governing body: Givology will provide an electronic copy of the Form 990 to all members on the board and governing body. Recipients are then asked to review, provide comments and feedback, and/or propose changes before the deadline of May 3, 2011 when all changes will be amalgamated. Dr. Chris Armstrong – our independent advisory board member who is an accounting professor at the University of Pennsylvania and a chartered tax accountant – will provide the final review to ensure all standards are met and reported appropriately

Monitoring compliance policy and conflicts of interest: Givology has a strict conflicts of interest & compliance policy, which is provided to every key stakeholder of the core team as a condition of admittance, including advisory board members, directors, and officers, among other parties. As a 100% volunteer-run organization, no compensation is involved but we have strict oversight over the allocation of funding to grassroots partners and the monitoring of the disbursement and use of funds to ensure the greatest impact. If a conflict arises, the Givology member will be recused from any activities related to that sector.

Weekly team meetings: On our weekly team meetings, we remind team members to self-report conflicts of interest if they arise. The core team functions as a democratic and transparent body, of which decisions are voiced openly and then debated in a public forum.

Semesterly core team retreats: When the officers of the core team congregate for our semesterly core team retreat, we dedicate time for a compliance and conflicts of interest policy refresher course, of which members are required to disclose any potential problems.

Board meetings: When the advisory board congregates, members are required to confirm if there has been any change to potential conflicts of interest.

Independent oversight: Through the partnership with the M. Night Shymalan Foundation, independent consultants and third party external sources have verified the system of checks and balances Givology has established for financial controls and conflicts of interest.
