Grants and other forms of assistance are made to qualifying organizations approved by the Institute's staff and directors. To qualify, at a minimum, an organization would need to legally establish a non-profit registered charity and be approved by local government, demonstrate fiscal responsibility, maintain an office with records, provide an agent specifically to represent the grantee to the grantor, and supply whatever records and proofs might be required by the Institute to measure progress and evaluate accomplishments. The staff of the Institute is typically very "hands on" regarding projects outside the United States. The board provides expertise, makes site visits, recommends outside consultants, and performs frequent reviews.

It is the nature of the kind of trainings we perform that the number of actual recipients of the trainings is small. We train trainers. In a given year we may instruct 20 or fewer trainers in each project. The number of people reached by these graduates and their own projects is quite large, however. It is expected to exceed several thousand people per project per year into the indefinite future. In the case of our Mexican project in 2012, we likely reached more than one million people whose lives were enhanced in matters regarding health, food security, childhood education and self-empowerment.
