Form 990, Part III, Line 1 - Organization Mission

Family Violence Law Center (FVLC) seeks to end family violence in Alameda County by providing support and advocacy for survivors of domestic violence, changing individual and community perceptions about relationship abuse, and advocating for change within the legal, health, education, and criminal justice systems.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4d - Other Program Services Description

FVLC's HEAL program provided 316 clinical hours of mental health services to 28 children and their primary caregivers to help heal from trauma experienced in domestic violence. By providing intensive parent/child psychotherapy to young children who have been exposed to domestic violence, the HEAL Program helps these children overcome the trauma of that experience so that they can go on to have a healthy, normal development.

FVLC actively participated in systems change work. FVLC participated in the development of statewide policies addressing domestic violence with the California Partnership to End Domestic Violence. FVLC trained domestic violence advocates on new laws during the Partnership's annual conference, and participated in the analysis of results from a statewide survey of domestic violence providers regarding the implementation of family law in their communities. FVLC also presented at the Partnership's annual conference and the National Center for Victims of Crime's annual conference. Locally, FVLC worked to improve the administration of family law in Alameda County through a series of meetings with the presiding judge of the family law department and court administrators. Additionally, FVLC staff chaired the county's domestic violence service providers' committee and the county's committee of legal services providers.
