Facts And Circumstances Test
Return Reference	Explanation
PART II, LINE 17A	While Southern Education Foundation, Inc. ("Foundation") failed to meet the mechanical "one-third of support" test in 2013, it clearly satisfied the alternative "facts and circumstances" test outlined in section 1 170A-9(f)(3) of the Treasury Regulations. Specifically, the two required factors are present in this case: 1. The organization must receive at least 10% of its support in the form of public support. As noted in Schedule A to Form 990, in 2013 the Foundation received approximately 30% of its total support in the form of public support - an amount far in excess of the 10% threshold. 2. The organization must have an active "continuous and bona fide" fundraising program designed to attract new and additional public support. The Foundation carried on an active and aggressive program of public solicitation in 2013 and raised over $500,000 from more than a dozen different sources. In addition, all of the "favorable factors" described in the tax regulations relevant to non-membership organizations are present in this case: 1. The higher the percentage of support above 10%, the lesser the burden of the organization in establishing that it is publicly supported. In this case, the Foundation's public support percentage is substantially above 10%. (The Foundation nearly satisfied the mechanical "one-third" test.) 2. The organization receives support from a representative number of persons rather than from members of a single family or from a limited base of support. Over the years, the Foundation has attracted contributions from a large and varied number of sources, including dozens of the nation's most well-known and respected charities. 3. The composition of the organization's governing body is representative of broad public interests. The Foundation's Board of Directors has a diverse membership which includes foundation executives, community leaders, and persons with special expertise in education. Its governing body represents the interests of the larger public rather than the personal or private interests of a limited number of donors. 4. The organization conducts programs and activities that are available to and that appeal to the general public. (The fact that a research or educational organization conducts scholarly studies which are used by educators or the general public is evidence of public support.) The Foundation conducts analyses of education issues, trends, and possibilities and disseminates the data in accessible formats to the lay public and to policy makers. Additionally, through its website, conferences, and direct dissemination of its publications, the Foundation provides essential information to the public about educational problems and solutions. In sum, the facts and circumstances in this case clearly demonstrate broad public support for, and interest and involvement in, the Foundation's mission and programs. Therefore, the Foundation continues to qualify as a "publicly supported charity" described in sections 509(a)(1) and 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) of the Internal Revenue Code.

	PART III, LINE 4A	Continued from Form 990, Part III, Line 4a 1 Community leaders are struggling to work on a number of issues and need help in a variety of ways that are specific to their state's demographic, political, and economic environments, 2 Advocates and policymakers are encouraged by SEF's willingness to support them in building not just defensive strategies, but offensive ones on a variety of educational issues, and 3 Stakeholders appreciate the opportunity to develop more long-term campaigns and partnerships and find the concept of a regional task force on poverty to be especially helpful in lifting up and reframing education as a key strategy for addressing issues of access, poverty and societal inequities SEF staff have strategically engaged with state leadership from across the region to identify tipping points for improving poverty and education, where the most progress is needed and the largest potential outcomes that can be realized with additional resources and support In result of these reconnaissance efforts, we see a number of opportunities to assist leaders in the advocacy community with activities that we think will promote more equitable educational systems in the region Early Education in the American South We learned in 2013 that the need for expanded early education in the South is arguably more important than ever Through a regional scan conducted in the year we found early education system leaders were under tremendous pressure to show policymakers they were making the most of public monies and putting funds toward high quality centers with proven strategies for increasing student outcomes A number of states have in response implemented higher credentialing standards for their workforce, instituted systems for evaluating and ranking center quality in both public and for-profit spaces, and developed systems for creating state curriculum standards In some states this takes the form of voluntary and/or mandated center participation in Quality Rated Improvements Systems to receive public funds And in even more advanced states, kindergarten entry assessments have been instituted to better inform these accountability efforts as well as make adjustments to K-12 curriculum Speaking to these new challenges and needs of the region, SEF partnered with the Schott Foundation for Public Education and the BUILD Initiative to develop a regional convening for early childhood policymakers The three organizations successfully convened six Southern states (AL, AR, GA, LA, MS, SC) in January, 2013 to focus on developing strategies for building more equitable early education systems and learn in greater detail what challenges were of greatest concern to stakeholders in the region Southern early education leaders from policymakers to early care providers were given a forum to share ideas for improving data systems, strengthening their workforce, and sharing best practices across-region for increasing enrollment and high-quality service to all vulnerable children In the latter half of the year, SEF and BUILD continued to facilitate activities where network leadership could stay engaged and learn from one another on key early childhood issues SEF created a storehouse of information for early education leaders to stay updated with data, policy and best practices in the birth-to-eight space Information from the convening was also shared on this web portal In addition, SEF made a special effort to improve the Southern states presence in the national discourse on early learning issues and connected Southern leadership with national advocacy organizations leading these efforts In the summer of 2013, SEF and BUILD facilitated Southern leaders' participation on a call with Linda K. Smith, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Administration for Children and Families, who discussed with national stakeholders early childhood workforce challenges and opportunities for developing a national birth- to-five strategy SEF and BUILD also organized multiple calls with the First Five Years Fund to provide feedback to the President's Early Learning Proposal and discuss challenges they foresaw with its adoption in the region SEF also led the network in drafting and submitting a letter with signatures from all six states to Secretary Arne Duncan and the US Department of Education that summarized the political, messaging, and implementation opportunities and concerns these key regional partners foresaw with the President's plan Advancing Public Education Efforts In September 2013, SEF and the Leadership Center for the Common Good convened over 100 advocates for public education from 11 Southern states to compare notes and lay the groundwork for a regional strategy to improve public education and push back against the movement to privatize public education Teacher's union state affiliates, community organizers, advocates, funders, school board association representatives, and elected officials shared information and strategy

	PART III, LINE 4A	ies for advancing public education during this three day conference held in Atlanta, Georgia. States reported out on what they were facing in terms of vouchers, tax credit scholarships, rising standards and expectations with reduced funding, charter school expansion, and the growing presence of ALEC and other national organizations in their states pushing anti-public education agendas. Strategy sessions were held on messaging, research, litigation, community organizing, and coalition building to support and improve public education. Attendees who work mostly at the local and state level were able to see that the push to privatize public education is happening on a regional and national level - they are not alone, and we must collaborate our efforts to be effective. And attendees worked across states and within states to identify common challenges, opportunities, strategies, and first steps to move forward before the upcoming legislative sessions. We surveyed attendees about the value of the resources from the convening and about the assistance that might be useful in the coming month and year. This provided useful information to SEF on ways we might support advocates across the South. One result was that we created a Google group where advocates were able to better share information and resources with each other. We also held a webinar on messaging where attendees were able to interact and update each other on their work. This regional network continues to grow and we will continue supporting and developing it. New Majority Report. In late 2013, SEF released the report- A New Majority Update- Low Income Students in the South and Nation which found that low income children had become a majority of students in the public schools of 17 states across the nation - and 13 of those states were in the South. The report received local, regional and national media coverage, with the Washington Post, and The Atlantic covering the study in 2013. The report continues to draw media coverage one year later, with the New York Times recently citing the report findings just this month. The report warns that this continued trend in both the South and the nation raised the prospect of "entrenched, inadequately funded educational systems that enlarge the division in America between the haves and have-nots." In addition, the SEF report finds: 1. Half or more of the public school children in two regions --the South and West-- are low income, and a near majority of all students across the nation are low income (48 percent), 2. Over the last ten years, the number of low income students have grown 3-4 times greater than the growth of per pupil expenditures in three of the four regions of the country, 3. During the last decade, while achievement scores have increased for most student groups, huge gaps still remain between low income and higher income students-- particularly in regions where less is spent on students, and 4. The achievement gap between low income and higher income students is as large or larger in private schools as in public schools. These findings update a 2007 report released by SEF, A New Majority Low Income Students in the South's Public Schools. It documented how low income students had become a majority in the South's public schools for the first time in more than four decades. Improving School Climate and Discipline practices across the Region. A third arena of activity in 2013 for SEF was focused on engaging organizations around out-of-school suspension and discipline practices. SEF focused on raising awareness about the importance of school climate, believing it is a critical strategy for closing the achievement gap for low income and minority students across the South. In 2013, SEF devoted a considerable amount of time to collecting and analyzing data on out-of-school suspensions for the South on a school, district and state-level for all racial groups using federal and state agency sourced data sets. The South continues to lead
