Explanation: The late filing of this return is due to an administrative clerical error on the part of the tax preparation company. The company was under the mistaken understanding that the return was submitted electronically on May 15, 2014, the due date of the return. Their internal processing records had this return mistakenly noted as e-filed. Upon receiving the notice from the IRS, a more detailed examination exposed the error. The return was completed and all signatures had been provided by the trustees by May 15, 2014 to the tax preparation company and copies of the return had also been provided to the trustees by the company, as in prior years. There was no way for the taxpayer to know that the return had not been actually submitted and no reason to think otherwise. Therefore the late filing was not intentional or negligent. Further, a review of the tax filing history should reveal that the taxpayer has always complied with filing when due and a further waiver is requested due to this being the first incident of late filing. New procedures have now be instituted to assure compliance in the future.
