Client Note 1	Client Note 1 - Allocation of Costs Between Programs, Program Descriptions, and Program Accomplishments in 2013 Program I Analysis of Public Agency Decisions (50%)CSE houses a top-notch team of researchers with a diverse background in a number of disciplines at the forefront of thinking about the new economy. We specialize in benefit-cost analysis, net public benefits analysis, non-market valuation, regional modeling, ecological footprints and sustainability analysis. Our projects are grouped into four core initiatives, including Net public benefits. Typically, both public and private decision makers lack all the information necessary for determining whether or not a proposed program, policy, or project is in the public interest. Our economists help expose the true costs of these decisions on the public as well as benefits that may be important but are difficult to quantify through standard economic analysis techniques. Our expertise includes non-market valuation, benefit-cost analysis, regional modeling, and other techniques needed to provide a more complete picture of overall economic impact. Climate economics By any account, the economic costs of climate change are expected to be staggering. One recent global assessment that added the specter of a decade long pulse of methane from the melting Arctic to standard climate impacts models found that net costs of climate change could range from $119 to $458 trillion depending upon what emissions scenario unfolds. Our analysts address the economics of climate change in a number of ways. We help evaluate the true costs of additional fossil fuel development. We estimate climate change costs on both market and nonmarket dimensions of economic wellbeing. And we help governments and communities identify cost-effective adaptation options. Green vs. gray infrastructure Investments in green infrastructure solutions like wetlands often provide economically superior ways to achieve environmental quality outcomes than conventional investments in gray infrastructure like new wastewater treatment plants. To help investigate the financial and economic tradeoffs, CSE helped pioneer Green vs. Gray Analysis (GGA). GGA builds on standard public investment analysis to help decision makers identify the least cost options for mitigating disaster risk, achieving regulatory targets, or maximizing net public benefits of public infrastructure. CSE is assisting a growing number of municipal water providers, land managers, and businesses quantify the bottom line benefits of restoring wetlands, forests, rivers and coastal ecosystems as an alternative to expensive technological solutions to their infrastructure needs. Sustainability An increasing number of nations, communities, academic institutions and businesses are committed to the overall idea of environmental, economic, and social sustainability. CSE helps define and measure sustainability with precision using state of the art metrics and techniques. We help identify initiatives that foster sustainability as well as practices that erode natural, human, built, and social capital over time. Accomplishments in 2013 included Ashland Watershed Green-Gray Analysis. With our partner Geos Institute, CSE completed a preliminary Phase I green-gray analysis (GGA) of potential benefits of investing in a package of green infrastructure actions including thinning, prescribed fire, and road reclamation and road mitigation in the Ashland, Oregon municipal watershed. These benefits were compared with a no action or gray scenario that represented what unmitigated costs of fires would be over a 20-year period. Over a 20-year period, CSE found that investing in an ambitious portfolio of these green infrastructure options could generate up to $20 million in savings after taking costs of implementation into account. Alternatives to the Northern Irrigation Supply ProjectWith our partner Geos Institute, CSE completed a Phase I GGA investigation of the potential cost savings associated with investments in green infrastructure solutions to water supply issues in the Cache la Poudre and Big Thompson watersheds of Colorado's Front Range. These benefits were compared with the costs of implementing the Northern Irrigation Supply Project, a gray infrastructure project involving a dam and complex water transfer system. CSE found that a large-scale program of investments in watershed restoration would cost $73 -$296 million to implement and significantly reduce the costs associated with chronic and episodic road impacts and high severity wildfire. If successful at generating enough additional flow to offset NISP, this could represent a cost savings of over 90% over NISP. Front Range Green-Gray AnalysisCenter for Sustainable Economy (CSE) and World Resources Institute (WRI) partnered with the Center for Collaborative Conservation at Colorado State University to investigate the potential cost savings associated with investments in green infrastructure solutions to water quality issues in the Cache la Poudre and Big Thompson Watersheds of Colorado's Front Range. Our analysis provides a preliminary Phase I GGA of cost-savings potential associated with green infrastructure options in both the upper and lower watershed areas. Over a 20-year period, investing in an ambitious portfolio of these green infrastructure options in the upper watershed could generate up to $320 million in savings after taking costs of implementation into account. In the lower watersheds, an assessment of nutrient reduction potential from cropland and grazing lands upstream from each city indicates that utilities in Fort Collins and Greeley could benefit from investing in best management practices in order to obviate the need for wastewater treatment plant upgrades. Investments in green infrastructure could represent a cost savings of over $15.4 million over a 20-year period. The magnitude of these potential cost savings warrants a closer look in a more detailed Phase II analysis. Potential Public Liability for Fossil Fuel Infrastructure in Cook InletCSE teamed up with Alaska's Cook Inletkeeper to help make the case for adequate bonding requirements for fossil fuel infrastructure in Cook Inlet. The existing oil wells, platforms, pipelines, and onshore processing facilities are now nearly 50 years old and are starting to be shut in. As they shut in, oil and gas companies are required to initiate plans for dismantling and removal of key infrastructure on state-owned land and to restore affected marine and shoreline ecosystems (DR&R). However, as demonstrated in Alaska and other states, this obligation is often disputed, unclear or not met, leaving states and federal taxpayers with a potential financial liability for cleaning up the damage left behind. The total costs of DR&R for 16 offshore platforms and 160 miles of oil pipelines in Cook Inlet will range between $402 million and $1.11 billion. Despite this, DR&R funding available to the State through bonds may represent no more than 25-50% of these total anticipated costs. Adding gas pipelines and other infrastructure with more ambiguous DR&R requirements would greatly increase this cost estimate and the associated funding gap. Our report demonstrates that bonding and related surety obligations for oil and gas infrastructure need enhanced clarity and predictability to best serve the interests of industry, government and Alaskans alike. Bonding requirements should not be based on a schedule of nominal fees, but the actual expected costs of DR&R for each facility, pipeline, platform, or other infrastructure element. Program II Solutions for Sustainability (40%)CSE works with governments, business leaders, educators and non-profits to develop innovative policies, new indicators of progress, and interactive on-line tools to foster the transition to a sustainable economy. We promote policy solutions based on a new paradigm of growth centered on well-being rather than an ever expanding scale of industrial activity. Our pioneering work on the Ecological Footprint and Genuine Progress Indicator helps establish these and other sustainability metrics as the vanguards for the new economy. Our award winning online tools for measuring sustainability have helped spotlight the beneficial impacts of lifestyle changes and green products. Our work on sustainability solutions includes Policy innovations. Making a swift and equitable transition to a sustainable economy will require a new suite of policies that encourage investment in natural and human capital, local self reliance, cooperation, sustainable production and consumption, and many other fundamental shifts from the conventional economic growth model. CSE helps develop public policy mechanisms like tax incentives, public procurement guidelines, regulatory standards and new institutions to encourage this transition. We help identify and disseminate information on best practices using case examples worldwide. We work cooperatively with public off
