Explanation

Lybba is a non-profit design company that unites the interests of patients, doctors, and researchers. By creating open-source infrastructures, networks, and healthcare interventions that place patients at the forefront of change, we are helping shape the future of patient health, clinical care, and research science. Our three-fold aims are intertwined: help patients access, understand, and make meaningful use of their medical information so they can better track and improve their health, give doctors better ways to share techniques and knowledge with each other in timely and useful ways in order to provide more effective care, and provide researchers continuous access to streams of patient data that can help them make and test hypotheses, and discover cures faster. Our design work partnerships include the Collaborative Chronic Care Network (C3N), a new model for devising and testing innovations in clinical care and research, funded by Cincinnati Children's Hospital. Designing and building a shared decision-making software product for patients and doctors, funded by a leader of Healthier Together, a movement to support nonprofit collaborative healthcare networks, funded by donations. Designing the Regional Resource Network of quality improvement health leaders across the country funded by the

A leader of the One Hundred Thousand Patients movement which brings together patients, doctors, and researchers in common cause around precision medicine, funded by donations.
