Program Service Accomplishments Feeding Laramie Valley, 2013

In service to the primary purpose of Action Resources International to eradicate and prevent child sexual abuse through advocacy, activism and community strengthening, its Feeding Laramie Valley (FLV) programs work for sustainable food access and security in Albany County, Wyoming. FLV programs operate from a core premise of social justice and equity to help achieve overall safety and security in families and communities through various cooperative efforts that are action oriented, community based and driven by individuals whose expertise is primarily informed by personal experience, backed by an understanding of the social context in which that experience was created. Feeding Laramie Valley also leads and partners in action research projects that are designed, implemented and reported out using social justice models that are community defined, based and driven.

Work in 2013 included an increase in garden mentoring and educational opportunities for community members, and the establishment of a home base that can be used as a community center of all kinds of FLV and ARI programs and related activities.

FINANCIAL NOTE: Funds for Food Dignity-related activities in the amount of $17,997.67 were not received until January 16, 2014 due to holiday closures at the University of Wyoming financial department. Food Dignity Research Project, 2013

In service to the primary purpose of Action Resources International (ARI) to eradicate and prevent child sexual abuse through advocacy, activism and community strengthening, its work on the Food Dignity Research Project provides support for five community sites across the country doing community led food systems work using social justice and equity models.

In 2013, Action Resources International took on the role of Community Liaison for the Food Dignity Research Project, serving its academic teams at Cornell University, Ithaca College and the University of Wyoming; and its community partner sites in Ithaca, New York; Brooklyn, New York; Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyoming; Feeding Laramie Valley, Wyoming; Ashland/Cherryland, California.

In this capacity, ARI provided on-site facilitation, support and leadership development, with a primary focus on advocacy for emerging constituent leaders who have themselves experienced trauma and/or oppression contributing to food insecurity and inequity.

ARI conducted meetings, interviews and mediation facilitation on matters of implementation and equity within the Food Dignity project; collected reflections, requests and recommendations from 30+ project team members and dozens of community based participants from each site; synthesized the collected input and made recommendations for improvement of the overall Food Dignity project implementation. ARI oversaw scopes of work for the five participant sites and directly for the case study investigator of East New York Farms!

In the course of its 2013 Food Dignity project work, ARI provided representation at multiple national and international conference presentations including the Yale Food Symposium and CE Expo 2013 in Newfoundland. The organization supported co-authorship on several papers, including the peer-reviewed published article Shared Voices, Different Worlds, published in Gateways: International Journal of Community Research and Engagement.

It is anticipated that ARI will remain active in its community liaison role for the Food Dignity Research Project throughout the project's duration, which ends in the spring of 2016; and through an additional year for collecting, reporting on and disseminating the project's findings.

FINANCIAL NOTE: Funds for Food Dignity-related activities in the amount of $17,997.67 were not received until January 16, 2014 due to holiday closures at the University of Wyoming financial department. Action Resources International
Growing Resilience, 2013

In service to the primary purpose of Action Resources International to eradicate and prevent child sexual abuse through advocacy, activism and community strengthening, the Growing Resilience project was piloted in 2013 with hope for future, larger efforts to follow.

Growing Resilience provides support for the creation, mentoring and use of backyard gardening as a health intervention (physical and mental health). Six brand new gardens were installed by FLV and season-long mentoring assistance in tending the gardens was provided. In partnership with the University of Wyoming, the health effects on the pilot participants (including three controls who did not receive gardens) were measured. As with all FLV programs, Growing Resilience was overseen by a diverse group of health professionals and community members, including individuals experiencing health challenges and food insecurity.

Full size Growing Resilience action research projects are in the development stage, to include randomized controlled studies as part of the full research aspect of the project.

Voice with Context, 2013

In service to the primary purpose of Action Resources International to eradicate and prevent child sexual abuse through advocacy, activism and community strengthening, the Voice with Context project continues its development phase in 2013 to help:

- establish recognition of victims and survivors as the only true experts of their own experience;
- provide education, support and mentoring for the self-defined needs of victims and survivors in their individual quests for healing, self-empowerment and diverse roles as social justice activists;
- create, implement and support public forums of victim and survivor voices of expertise that raise awareness, educate communities and have an impact on public policy within a political and cultural context.

Specifically, Voice with Context is a project to address child sexual abuse within a social/political context, and to both recognize and encourage victims and survivors of child sexual abuse as the most effective experts and leaders for addressing this reality.

In 2013, research and development work continued toward the objectives of Voice with Context to establish a web presence that sheds light on child sexual abuse as a prevalent scourge established because of cross cultural norms that encourage control through power over others — one that utilizes the extreme power of violating an individual's personal sexuality as a means of establishing long term control.

Activities conducted in 2013 included:

- Networking, education and research, on web presence needs, including participation at the internationally attended Nonprofit Technology Network conference held in Washington, D.C.
- Establishing a web page construction site and drafting initial content.
- To help establish the recognition of survivors as first person experts, the Voice with Context component of Action Resources International also began an exploratory process for seeking support to conduct research on the issue of "What is the impact of historical and individual trauma and ongoing oppression on civic engagement and public discourse?"

This question represents a proposed research project to explore the issues arising from it, and to develop recommended practices for addressing trauma and oppression related barriers to participation in the democratic process, by convening first person experts and leaders.

Discussions were entered into with Kettering Foundation for support to do preliminary exploration of the need and potential for creating such a research project.
