HOW WE WORK	NBT engages stakeholders to identify issues related to the community's health, education and human service needs With over 1,000 documented potential stakeholder partners, over 200 local social programs, and many funding partners, the need to convene partners to find solutions is great Uniquely positioned, NBT brings together a diversity of partners to dialogue and take action on community development needs This process has been used successfully for almost 40 years, building a community that continues to move New Brunswick's people forward IDENTIFY NEEDS NBT uses data from resident surveys and input from partners in the field Whether it's the Center for Public Interest Poling, Center for State Health Policy, or the Bloustein Center for Survey Research, NBT collaborates with firms that are independent, objective and well established Additionally, our community partners help us to make sense of survey findings by lending us their significant experience in the field By combining both data and stakeholder experiences, a clear picture of community needs emerges ENGAGE THE COMMUNITY NBT facilitates a community-participatory planning process, engaging diverse stakeholders and residents to develop strategies for action Task forces, coalitions, workgroups and other community forums are commonly used to build consensus Equally important, however, is the engagement of NBT by the community Because of our expertise, reach in the community and leadership, the community engages our organization to address issues, some of which may not show up on surveys We've learned that effective community engagement works both ways GROW PARTNERSHIPS NBT develops specific initiatives aimed at engaging youth in programs, improving neighborhoods and developing resident access to health and wellness resources These initiatives work best through partnerships that bring their talent, resources and experiences Guided by a logic model developed in partnership with over 120 stakeholders, NBT makes and leverages investments in partnerships in order to help residents and neighborhoods move forward ASSESS AND LEARN NBT and its partners serve the community best when we learn from our investments Evaluations and assessments are routinely conducted to understand where we've made strides in addressing community challenges and where we need to make adjustments to deepen our impact This is how our partnerships achieve success Please see our website at www.nbtomorrow.org
