The Coffee Trust continued to support Education, Health Care, Economic Diversification, Food Sovereignty during FY2013/14 In addition, The Coffee Trust added the Roya Recovery Project in early 2014 Education The Coffee Trust supported 57 scholarships for middle school and high school Ixil students through its local partner Horizontes sin Limites, and supported the only local library in San Gaspar Chajul where young Ixil students from first grade through high school come to learn to read, listen to stories, do research and homework Health Care The Coffee Trust supported a local health care program in the Ixil region that teaches women about family gardening to produce food for consumption and sale for added income Additionally, families learn to grow their own medicinal herbs to use to address illnesses and easily preventable disease that all too often have debilitating and often-fatal effect on family members, especially young children Economic Diversification The Coffee Trust supported 3 alternative income projects in the Ixil region 1)Chajulense de Mujeres Womens Savings and Micro-Credit for women to start or improve small, cottage-type, family businesses to add to family income and supplement income from coffee This year, as the devastating Roya fungus that destroyed 75% of the regions coffee production, the micro-credit project proved incredibly valuable to keep families alive 2)Chajulense de Mujeres Womens Weaving Project for women to improve their production of Ixil weavings and sell their weavings locally and for export This project is getting closer to a level of financial independence 3)CopiChajulense Honey Project for farmers with little or no land for coffee production to earn an income from the sale of honey The project is on track to become its own independent organization Food Sovereignty The Food Sovereignty Project is growing slowly as it is located in one of the dirtiest communities in the area Riddled with disease, the community has always had difficulty keeping themselves healthy as well as their chickens healthy and producing enough eggs to fulfill the family need for protein This is still a challenge, but this year, we introduced Effective Microorganisms that have not only helped keep the chickens healthier, they have also kept the local families healthier as these microorganisms help cleanse contaminants, which are all too often found the food and especially the water The la Roya Recovery is a new project that was implemented in June of 2014 La Roya in Spanish means rust There has been a fungus growing rampant in Central America that has been destroying coffee plants especially in Guatemala and Honduras In the Ixil region, 75% of the coffee production has been destroyed So, The Coffee Trust undertook a Roya Recovery Project that includes the use of 1)Effective Microorganisms to kill La Roya on coffee leaves and starve it in the soil,2)Cover Cropping to reintroduce nitrogen into the soil after having been depleted through harvest after harvest without nitrogen recovery3)Pruning 20% of each farm each year for 5 years to cleanse the plants of unproductive branches and allowing the energy in each plant to be more efficient and more effective4)Ash to add to the soil for added minerals5)Red Worm Composting to add rich nutrients back into the soil, once again after years of harvesting without doing so In addition, and possibly more importantly, is the implementation of the principles of Campesino a Campesino, the shared learning principles that transfer knowledge and practice from farmer-to-farmer We use these principles In Roya Recovery and Food Sovereignty to empower farmers We have learned that when farmers learn from an NGO or an agronomist or a professional of any sort, they sense the importance of the educated professional and, with no intent on the part of the professional, the famers learn that it requires a professional to do this work Obviously this is not the case as farmers are fully capable of understanding and implementing these new ideas The farmer-to-farmer program is designed so farmers reach other farmers and when this occurs, farmers experience is quite different Hey! That farmer is just lime me If he can do it, so can I the program has had great success and has become the heart of our development effort
