The Health Systems Strengthening Area includes PHII (Public Health Informatics Institute), TEPHINET (Training Programs in Epidemiology and Public Health), and African Health Workforce Project PHII provided direct services to the US public health system through a cooperative agreement with the CDC, funding from the de Beaumont and Robert Wood Johnson foundations This funding supported state and local health departments in developing immunization information systems, CDC in developing an immunization information strategy, PHII in providing technical assistance to state and local health departments in linking to private healthcare electronic records systems, and it supported PHII in providing training to informatics fellows The funding also supported the development of a workforce deployment tool for African countries to use in deploying health workers for HIV treatment and prevention TEPHINET provided services to the US public health system through cooperative agreements with the CDC This federal funding supported primarily the development of field epidemiology training programs (FETPs) and graduates around the world to prevent, detect and respond to public health threats such as outbreaks and natural disasters and to tackle challenging issues in chronic disease One cooperative agreement focused on the development of FETPs in Latin America specifically, further development of a regional network of FETPs there, as well as HIV and influenza surveillance in Central America The other agreement had a more global focus and supported several field epidemiology projects utilizing residents and graduates of programs to evaluate surveillance systems, analyze public health data and provide recommendations to senior public health officials, investigate outbreaks, develop preventive interventions, and conduct basic scientific studies TEPHINET also collaborated with the CDC on a key quality improvement project to start accrediting FETPs in the coming year Three programs are currently involved in this initiative at this point in time At the end of the year TEPHINET also completed an assessment of its learning needs and will be starting the development of an expanded learning management system and community practice network African Health Workforce Project Countries worldwide are challenged by health worker shortages and an imbalance of skilled health professionals Often there is an abundance of skilled workers in some regions while other communities are lacking Regulatory agencies, charged with ensuring the quality of the education and skills of the healthcare professionals, are often underfunded and lack basic resources such as information systems, frameworks for continuous professional education and IT infrastructure Healthcare managers need adequate information about the supply and demand for healthcare workers to manage their workforce more efficiently, plan for scale up of the workforce, ensure proper regulation of professionals, and to develop effective human resource policies However, many countries lack computerized data systems that can provide these critical data The African Health Workforce Project is designed to address these issues by assisting health professional regulatory agencies in development of human resource information systems, improvement of IT infrastructure, and collaborative forums to assist them in strengthening regulatory functions to improve professional standards in the east, central, and southern regions of Africa
