recipients of the Free and Reduced Lunch Program at school Many of our programs are prevention-orientated and re devoted to preventing school failure and delinquency among at-risk youth Programs such as ours are the basis for an effective continuum of care because they are often the point of entry for families in need of multiple services By interacting with the families on daily basis, we are benefits and joy of growing, preparing, and eating their own food Unfortunately, given the economic conditions of the area we serve, this is an ongoing struggle However, in order to reach the long term goal to end hunger, we have very specific objectives When a client comes to our center seeking food we have active volunteers and personnel who ask questions regarding the client's particular need We assist them with signing up for programs such as SNAP, unemployment compensation, filling out job application, resumes and connecting them to job resources We also strive to help influence dietary choices for better health through various workshops In addition, PMIA is working with University of Florida's Extension Services and Lee county Health Department to develop new programs for English Many of those affected are adult women who are already living in poor conditions that are further exasperated by their lack of ability to communicate Pine Manor Community Center has partnered with Children's Advocacy Center to bring an after school program to the community to assist children with their homework and reading skills because many of them do not have anyone in the home that speaks the language to assist Literacy has a profound socio-economic impact on our families and perpetuates the cycles of poverty (due to limited productive capacity, lack of skills needed to gaining children PMIA recognizes literacy is both the cause and effect of numerous social challenges We have partnered with the Literacy Council of Lee County to train someone to teach English We currently have 2 English classes A beginner's class and an intermediate class for those adults that want to work on learning English We also provide a GED class so that adults can improve themselves by getting
