The Prosecutors film features:

Colombia

The Colombian armed conflict is one of the longest in the world, rooted in a 10-year civil war between political parties in Colombia. This conflict led to the creation of various guerrilla and paramilitary groups that have been fighting the government since the early 1960s. While the guerrillas claim to be fighting for the rights of poor Colombians, the paramilitary groups claim they are protecting citizens from guerrilla threats. In order to protect its citizens the Colombian government is fighting for order and stability.

This conflict has killed over one million people and displaced more than five million, the largest group of internally displaced people worldwide. Those affected also face sexual and physical assault, as well as forced membership and many other violent crimes. This is where civil society and human rights groups come into play as the leading champions of witness protection and prosecution. They work with prosecutors from the Fiscalía to bring criminals to justice.

The prosecutor from the Fiscalía (name withheld at the present time) followed in this documentary is fighting to help victims of sexual violence, assaulted by a paramilitary commander in a rural area of Colombia see justice. Her responsibilities include coordinating a large and dedicated team determined to navigate the road to justice while avoiding life-threatening security threats, legal challenges, and long-held cultural impediments to the public discussion of sexual violence.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

While much of the world has been focused on the war crimes and crimes against humanity tried with much international attention at the International Criminal Court in the Hague, in Bihac, and around Bosnia and Herzegovina, the judicial system has been tackling the hard, often slow, and always challenging effort of ending the global culture of impunity for perpetrators of sexual violence in conflict at the most local of levels. This work involves not only prosecutors but also police investigators, witness protection teams, and most importantly, survivors, their families, and those who are accused of crimes. The 20-years that have passed since these crimes were committed (between 1992 - 1995) have in no way lessened the pain for those who live with the daily memories, but they have made a hard task already harder, especially when combined with a strong concern by survivors of shame and stigma.

It is against this backdrop that Jasmin Mesic and the team at the Una Sana Canton Prosecutor's Office brings these important cases to court. He and his team are coordinate a network of civil society support groups, social workers, and police investigators with little fanfare but absolute conviction; challenging the idea that rape is the one war crime that justice cannot address.

DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO

Sometimes, problems with access to justice are literally physical. The Democratic Republic of Congo is the size of Western Europe - and there are simply not enough courts, judges, roads, prisons, lawyers, and anything or anyone else necessary to make access to justice easy. These shortages are compounded by, and often caused by, the decades of violence that the eastern portion of the country has endured.

But that doesn't mean that lawyers in the DRC have given up, nor does it mean that victims and witnesses are unwilling to testify, even when they risk enormous consequences. Congolese lawyers like Amani Kahatwa and her colleagues at the American Bar Association Rule of Law Initiative and partners at Avocats Sans Frontières and others are working together with civil society, the UN, and the DRC government to support the ability of the Congolese judicial system to meet the needs of those whose bodies have been the battleground for war. This effort is not fast, nor is it easy, but it is happening.

Congo Women is a traveling photography exhibition highlighting the beauty and strength of the girls and women of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), a group of girls and women who currently face an unprecedented wave of gender-based violence and a lack of essential medical care.

Featuring the work of Lynsey Addario, Marcus Bleasdale, Ron Haviv, and James Nachtwey, the installation weaves together large portraits of Congolose women and contextual images of the region's culture and history along with explanatory essays. The result of this combination is a touring project which depicts the complexity of the situation and incites viewers to act.

Video and audio testimonies also accompany the exhibition, allowing viewers to gain an in-depth understanding of the crisis.

Congo/Women discusses the effects of such gender violence, which include pregnancy as a result of rape, obstetric and traumatic fistula, HIV infection, permanent reproductive health damage, and death. In addition to these conditions, the exhibition presents the inevitable societal stresses caused by such atrocities. Curated from a combination of existing photography and newly-commissioned work - particularly of women and girls recovering from violence - the exhibit provides a comprehensive view of the issue and its possible solutions.
