The annual Seacology Prize recognizes heroic achievement by people who seldom receive any publicity indigenous leaders who may risk their own lives to protect their island's ecosystems and culture In 2015, the prize went to Lakshmi Moorthy, who since childhood, has worked in the Gulf of Mannar, India as a seaweed harvester, a subsistence living for many of the women of her community In 2002, that livelihood came under threat as the government, in a well-meaning but poorly designed action, began enforcing a marine reserve in their traditional harvesting grounds The womens boats and even food and water were confiscated, sometimes by corrupt officials who demanded bribes to return them Lakshmi helped organize the displaced workers into a federation, of which she became president After a long period of negotiation with government representatives, NGOs, and conservation scientists, the group struck an agreement to protect both the environment and womens livelihood In 2014, the government agreed to recognize the Gulf of Mannar seaweed collectors as a unique group of women fishers and issued them biometric ID cards, to protect them from harassment by officials They are now free within the restrictions they themselves have imposed to safeguard the resource and to pursue their livelihood
