| Part I, Line 2   | Some Travel grants are available to students to attend ACM Conferences with procedures in place to ensure a fair and unbiased selection from the submissions sent to the numerous selection committees for the various conferences. The procedures also contain clauses to prevent conflicts for any individual committee member and all grants are given based upon a majority vote of committee members. The students applying for the travel grants are required to show academic correlation to the conference subject matter. The small number of awards that are given are determined by committees with procedures to ensure the proper evaluation of the nominees. All grant recipients are required to submit supporting documents to support the use of travel funds. |

| Part I, Line 2   | Some travel grants are available to students to attend ACM Conferences with procedures in place to ensure a fair and unbiased selection from the submissions sent to the numerous selection committees for the various conferences. The procedures also contain clauses to prevent conflicts for any individual committee member and all grants are given based upon a majority vote of committee members. The students applying for the travel grants are required to show academic correlation to the conference subject matter. The small number of awards that are given are determined by committees with procedures to ensure the proper evaluation of the nominees. The Association makes a very small number of grants to organizations in the U S. These organizations share common goals and objectives with ACM. ACM will occasionally support other organizations in areas where ACM feels there is a benefit to computing and the computing field. These grants are requested at the board or committee level and are approved by the ACM Council or the Executive Committee. All grant recipients are required to submit supporting documentations to support the use of travel funds. |
