Grantmaker's Description of How Grants are Used	Cost reimbursement grants are used by recipient organizations to conduct outreach and education to the populace within the recipient organization's service area. Outreach and education efforts are for the Food Stamp Program (now federally known as Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program), reduced cost and free school meals, summer food service program, and other nutrition assistance programs. These efforts are conducted through use of advertisements in local media, distribution of posters, brochures, flyers, and other low cost promotional items, and presentations to potentially eligible individuals, individual face to face meetings with potentially eligible individuals, and other Outreach and Education methods approved for use on the Nutrition Outreach and Education Program. An on-site fiscal review is performed at each recipient organization once per grant cycle (currently 4 years) to test the documentation for charged expenses. An on-site program review is performed twice per grant cycle to assess program effectiveness and compliance with program guidelines. Additionally, each grant year, recipient organizations not subject to an on-site fiscal review must submit one monthly expense statement with copies of documentation attached. The full documentation expense statements are subjected to a desk audit.
