Co-FED empowers communities of students across North America to create financially sustainable campus hubs for food & social justice activism. Participants use a reproducible, cooperative development model to create a scalable network of independent student run businesses, with a commitment to share skills, resources and eventually start-up capital. Goals and objectives are: (1) to train 200 new leaders in the food sustainability movement; (2) to give 1 million college students the choice to actively participate in the food system; (3) to create 35 financially viable student run cooperatives in regional clusters. To accomplish these objectives we create an evolving best-practices model, a support network & a peer-based training program. Co-FED is currently engaged in 16 university based projects serving in excess of 15,000 students and the communities related thereto. We collaborate with local community organizations to extend our outreach to many thousands of others.
