Part I Additional Supplemental Information

ZYZZYVA History and Mission

ZYZZYVA was founded in 1985 as a not for profit arts organization whose main project is publication of a journal of contemporary art and literature. Over the past 32 years, ZYZZYVA has grown into a critically acclaimed cultural platform of national significance. We bring some of the best and brightest writers and artists to a diverse national and international audience through a print journal, which is published three times per year; a vibrant year-round schedule of free readings and events; and our website, zyzzzyva.org, which offers original writing, video podcasts, interviews, and criticism.

Beneficiaries

Many of contemporary literature's most lauded voices have launched their careers within the pages of ZYZZYVA, making it a reputable and pedigreed resource for new writers hoping to break through. Po Bronson, Chitra Divakaruni, Haruki Murakami, Jim Gavin and F.X. Toole all first appeared in the journal; ZYZZYVA was also an early publisher of Sherman Alexie, Molly Giles, Kay Ryan, Adrienne Rich, Raymond Carver and many others. Every year, never before published writers make their debut in ZYZZYVA. In 2016 alone, two of our stories were reprinted in The Best American Short Stories, and eight were selected as Notables; one of our stories won an O. Henry Prize and another won a Pushcart; an essay was reprinted in The Best American Nonrequired Reading (which also selected a story as a Notable); and The Best American Essays selected two essays as Notables—all of which meant that with the exception of the (much larger) New Yorker magazine, no journal was as well-represented in the country's annual anthologies as ZYZZYVA. And unlike many small journals, we pay our authors for every piece we publish. ZYZZYVA therefore serves an important role in supporting contemporary authors and artists.

Since 1985, ZYZZYVA has published 110 issues, bringing attention to emerging and established fiction and non-fiction writers, poets and visual artists. The journal is available in over 600 bookstores nationwide, as well as 116 libraries. Work appearing in the journal has consistently been reprinted in literature's most notable anthologies and honored by dozens of awards and prizes. Works from our 2012 issues received re-publication in the 2013 anthologies of Best American Short Stories and Best American Essays, and 8 pieces were named to the Best American lists of Notables. Works from our 2013 issues were selected for the 2014 anthologies of Best New Poets, Best American Nonrequired Reading and awarded a Pushcart Prize. Writing published in ZYZZYVA has also garnered the O. Henry Prize, and writers and artists highlighted in our journal have gone on to receive attention and support for their creative excellence from the National Endowment for the Arts, the Rona Jaffe Award, and Fulbright and Guggenheim Fellowships.

Attraction of Public Support

ZYZZYVA has always had a dedicated and engaged donor and subscriber base, and has always sought and received support from a variety of public sources. However, the sources of financial support for a literary organization are always hard to come by, especially given the limited resources of ZYZZYVA. Over the past several years, we have reinvigorated our grant-seeking program, our donor cultivation and interaction, and our fundraising campaigns (events, online, and mail campaigns). As a result, we have seen our individual donations grow from $14,000 in 2011, to more than $46,000 in 2016 – a trend which we intend to continue and build upon. We have grant applications pending with several government and private funders. Our grant-seeking in 2015 resulted in a generous gift of support from the National Endowment for the Arts for our 2016 year, which will increase the organization's public support percentage. The public support percentage for 2015 and 2016 were 21% and 24% respectively, both of which are well in excess of the minimum 10% requirement, and we fully expect the percentage to increase going forward.

Public Participation in Programs

ZYZZYVA does more to engage a public audience than any other literary magazine of its size. On our own and in partnership with a diverse array of other arts organizations, we host or participate in up to two dozen events each year—all of which (with few exceptions) are free and open to the public. We reach a broad public audience through these events, most of which are attended at capacity.

In 2016 we hosted or participated in 25 events (18 of which were free), in 7 cities across the U.S. Our staff also spoke at 8 conference events or panels. Our events covered an array of topics, from literature and diversity in Los Angeles, to the resurgence of American interest in reading works in translation, to the craft of editing and publishing literary magazines.

We estimate that our total audiences at our 2016 events was 1,287.

Perhaps no other literary journal is so active in contributing to free, public events—certainly there is no other literary journal of our size (3 FTE staff) doing so many events. We do this because we believe public engagement is essential to fostering a sense of community around the modern literary arts—work that is often created and first appreciated in solitude, but which engenders a desire for camaraderie and discussion.

We also engage with the public through our vibrant, frequently updated website.

There we offer original content (separate from what we publish in the journal)—more than 225 book reviews (the majority of which focus on independent publishers and lesser-known authors), 72 author interviews, and a growing collection of video interviews with the journal's writers and artists, as well as fiction, nonfiction, and poetry excerpts from our archives. All of which is available to the public, for free. Our annual online audience is about 73,000.

Recent Challenges and Growth

Like many literary print journals in the 21st century, ZYZZYVA has faced its share of financial hurdles. The post-recession period was especially challenging, with our organization accruing operating deficits over multiple years.

Upon assuming stewardship of ZYZZYVA in 2011, Editor Laura Cogan took several steps to strengthen the journal's long-term viability and financial health; these steps were taken swiftly, but, as can be expected, their benefits take time to fully develop. To help the organization get back on its feet, several large donations were solicited in attempts to keep the organization solvent, which was successful - but such donations ultimately hurt the public support percentage necessary for public charity status.

Unfortunately, we faced another setback in 2014 when we lost our office space lease after our rent was doubled. Although the rent on our new space is less expensive than it would have been to keep our old space, as is consistent with the upward trend in San Francisco's rental market, it is still far more than our rent in previous years. Higher earned income from sub-rentals and increased sales and donations were not enough to entirely offset this unexpected increase to our administrative expenses, leading ZYZZYVA to end 2016 with a small operating deficit.

ZYZZYVA has taken vigorous steps to increase our financial health every year. We created and initiated our first year-end fundraising campaign in 2013, which led to a 20% increase in revenue that year and was even more financially successful in 2014. ZYZZYVA also launched, for the first time ever, an annual event fundraiser in 2014, which raised even more money in 2015. To help build these new programs, ZYZZYVA hired a development consultant to help develop our fundraising infrastructure—an investment necessary to give us the tools to survive and grow as an organization.

We are moving to end 2017 and future years in a healthy financial position by keeping our operating costs lean and continuing to build on contributed income with the strategies we developed in 2014. These strategies include continuing our work to increase our individual donor base, and aggressively pursuing grant opportunities including government and private foundations.

Our Board of Directors, though small, is a dedicated group of accomplished professionals from all backgrounds who see the value of this vibrant and productive arts organization, and support us in their various communities.

Amid all these efforts, ZYZZYVA remains steadfast in our commitment to supporting our authors by paying them well, and to playing a vibrant role in the Bay Area arts community. For these reasons, ZYZZYVA should continue to qualify as a publicly publishing the journal and to continue our support for writers and artists. To that end, we published three exemplary issues of the journal in 2016, featuring new works by 58 writers and substantial portfolios by 3 visual artists, in beautifully produced and carefully edited volumes which were distributed to bookstores and newsstands nationwide. We hosted or participated in 23 free events to bring publicity, attention and a live audience to our authors. We continue to offer emerging talents a valuable, nationally-distributed platform (featuring fiction by 20 emerging writers in the journal over the course of the year) while also offering substantial support (through publicity, in print and online; through events; and through sustaining our increased author payments) for all our authors, emerging and established alike.
