Part I Summary

1 Briefly describe the organization's mission or most significant activities
Immunotherapy Foundations (IF) initial mission is to find an effective treatment, and ultimately a cure for HPV-related cancers through the partnering and funding of research, studies and revolutionary treatments broadly known as immunotherapy. This research falls under the following three broad immunotherapy categories: adoptive cell therapies, immune response vaccines, and novel drugs. All projects will be designed to bring promising human therapies to the clinic. The projects will address the biology of HPV-related cancers, particularly those of the head and neck. The current research shows promise to extend to other malignancies. The projects are tightly interconnected to leverage information, allowing efficient movement into the clinic.
