Client Note 1	Client Note 1 - Headwaters Economics 2018 Form 990 Accomplishments Headwaters Economics announced that four new communities would participate in the Community Planning Assistance for Wildfire program (CPAW) which helps cities and counties reduce wildfire risk through land use planning. CPAW now helps 30 communities across the country. The program created in cooperation with Wildfire Planning International and funded through the U.S. Forest Service and private foundations works with communities across the country to provide technical assistance such as land use planning, forestry expertise, and risk assessments. Presented a talk in Washington, D.C. to the partners of the USFS State and Private Forestry (S&PF) organization to highlight the CPAW program and how land use planning tools can be used to reduce wildfire risk. A Headwaters Economics study, done in cooperation with the Institute for Business and Home Safety, found negligible cost differences between a typical home and a home constructed using wildfire-resistant materials and design features. Decades of research and post-fire assessments have provided clear evidence that building materials and design, coupled with landscaping on the property, are the most important factors influencing home survivability during a wildfire. While codes and standards have been developed for building in wildfire-prone lands, the perceived cost of implementing such regulations is a commonly cited barrier to consideration and adoption by some communities. However, little research previously had examined how much it would actually cost the homeowner or builder to comply with such regulations. Headwaters Economics updated a report on all communities across the United States threatened by wildfires from 2000-2017. The map tool and accompanying searchable database also show the different sizes of wildfires and distances from nearby communities. The tools may be useful in identifying frequently impacted areas for those working to help communities become fire-adapted. Also, Headwaters Economics released a literature study that found that nearly half of the community costs of wildfires are paid at the local community level by government agencies, non-governmental organizations, businesses, and homeowners. Almost all wildfire costs accrued at the local level are the result of long-term damages such as landscape rehabilitation, lost business and tax revenues, degraded ecosystem services, depreciated property values, and impacts to tourism and recreation. The remaining wildfire costs are paid at the state and federal level, or are paid by a combination of local, state, and federal organizations. State and federal agencies are responsible for paying the bulk of suppression costs. In a related effort, Headwaters Economics released a study showing that the number of western Montana homes in areas with high wildfire hazard has doubled, outpacing development rates in areas with low wildfire hazard. The wildfire hazard data used for this
