Client Note 1	Client Note 1 - Headwaters Economics 2019 Form 990 Accomplishments Headwaters Economics staff delivered more than 40 public talks, briefings, and presentations to the public, elected officials, agencies, and others throughout the year. Five newsletters were published in 2019. EquityDisadvantaged populations are more likely to experience adverse social, health, and economic outcomes due to race, age, gender, poverty status, and other socioeconomic measures. In addition, understanding the impacts of climate change is important to reducing vulnerabilities and building resilient communities and economies. Projects in 2019 included Updated nationwide data for Populations at Risk, a free, online tool that creates reports about populations more likely to experience adverse social, health, or economic outcomes. Completed a report on how cities can use economic methods and data to make a case for climate adaptation in their municipalities. Began expansion of Neighborhoods at Risk, a free, online climate-risk planning tool for 27 cities to the entire nation. The web-based data and maps are used for presentations, grant proposals, planning decisions, shaping land use, or prioritizing capital improvements. Completed a Denver-area transit equity analysis to identify where potential bus rapid transit corridors are most likely to enhance mobility and equity. Outdoor Recreation Access to trails and outdoor recreation is an important part of local economies, attracting businesses and drawing in new residents and visitors. Our research analyzes the scope and scale of the outdoor recreation economy and how communities can benefit from trails. Projects in 2019 included Researched and released a report on the large and fast-growing outdoor recreation economy nationwide. Data online can be explored by state. Compiled a list of funding needs to support Montana's outdoor heritage. Funding for Montana's working lands, wildlife, and outdoor recreation is not keeping pace as population, visitation, and development pressures expand. Analyzed the value of Montana's outdoors, which attracts people and talent, and creates jobs and a high quality of life. Report concludes that the outdoors is essential to the state's economic growth. Researched and released a report affirming that outdoor-recreation counties attract new residents, have higher incomes, and see faster earnings growth than counties without recreation. Updated the online Library of Trails Benefits. The free, online library of 144 studies is searchable by type of benefit, use, year, and region. Testified about the importance of outdoor recreation to state and local economies at a House committee hearing in Washington, DC. Public Lands Protected federal lands are important economic assets that attract people and businesses, as well as new jobs and income. Our research helps communities understand the implications of nearby public lands. Projects in 2019 included Hosted a forum on People and Public Lands and collected and posted online 12.
